OUTLAW GUNS

BY E. E. HALLERAN

THE STORY SO FAR: Dan Frazer, arriving by train at Caliente Junction on his way to Mesa Verde, boards a stagecoach for the last phase of his journey. With him on the stage are two other passengers, a dapper, pompous little man and a lovely young girl whom the stage driver calls "Miss Helen." They too, are going to Mesa Verde, a little copper-mining town close to the Mexican border. Five miles from Mesa Verde, a shot rings out and brings the stage to a halt. Masked men appear, guns in hand, and force the passengers to alight from the stage. One of the men proceeds to take their money and valuables. The bandits, however, seem strangely disinterested in the loot.

CHAPTER II

A new voice broke into the proceedings at that point. From somewhere high on the rock ledge above the trail a man yelled, "Git that mail sack down—and shake it up! Git the chore done!"

The smaller bandit stirred restlessly but did not take his attention away from the three people in front of him. He even contrived a mocking little bow as he addressed the girl. "Sorry to bother ye like this, ma'am. I reckon ye kin git back into the wagon."

He waved his gun airily as he spoke and turned his attention to the stage driver, ordering the little man to toss the mail bag to the ground. The bag came down, accompanied by the bristling comments of the outraged oldster, and once more the two bandits went into whispered conference. Oddly enough they seemed most interested in the contents of the wallet which had been taken from the older passenger. Even more odd was the way they ignored the sheaf of yellow-backed bills and studied the cards and papers which were there.

Bandits Wantonly Shoot 'Neat Little Stranger'

The voice on the high rocks came again, stridently urging. "Use yer eyes, ye loco numbskulls. The fancy one. Git him!"

Suddenly the pair by the trail started back toward the coach, the larger bandit lagging back a little and keeping his gun aimed in the general direction of the driver. The smaller gunman was within two paces of the standing trio when he barked, "Don't pull that gun!" The words faded under the blast of his six-shooter, two quick shots booming in rapid succession.

The girl screamed once, but choked it off quickly as the bandit turned his bronc and galloped for the shelter of the ledges.

Frazer made two quick moves when he realized that the bandit was going to shoot. His violent shove sent the girl staggering away from the center of action just as the gun roared, then he sprang forward grimly, intending to make one desperate effort to pull the gunman from the saddle. The plan miscarried when the outlaw whirled and retreated so hastily.

Frowning perplexedly he turned to look down at the man who had been the target for those two unprovoked bullets. The neat little traveler had collapsed in a heap against one of the coach's rear wheels, his body almost in a sitting position. The sag of the head and the bloody shirt front told the story, however. The man was dead, two bullets having driven squarely into his heart.

There was nothing to be done for him, so Frazer swung to face the girl. She had gone down as a result of his shove but was up again now, limping a little but interested only in the fate of the unfortunate man against the wheel.

He knelt beside the body and went gingerly through the pockets of the now dusty pepper-and-salt suit. The search disclosed nothing but a new deck of cards, some loose coins and a small black notebook. The book contained no names, nothing but a series of figures which seemed to be an expense account. So he put everything back where he had found it, standing up to find the girl's dark eyes intent upon him.

He knew he should keep his own role as inconspicuous as possible, but he could not forbear asking a question. "Are you sure you don't know who this man was?"

She shook her head. "Of course not. Couldn't you tell by the questions he was asking that he was a stranger?"

"He sounded like it—but I can't understand why he was killed if he was not known in this country. I'd say that the whole job was staged for the purpose of killing him."

"I agree. But I'm sure he was a stranger. It must be that the murderers were also strangers to the region."

"But they knew about Petey's deafness," he pointed out. "And I'd bet that the big one is someone you would recognize."

"How do you make that out?" she flashed, her resentment almost as quick as the driver's had been.

Frazer smiled faintly. "Think back. The big man was noisy enough at the start. He was giving the orders. Then he discovered that you were in the coach. So he shut up in a hurry and turned the job over to his partner. He wasn't afraid of my recognizing him—and he certainly wasn't concerned over being recognized by the man he certainly proposed to murder. It was you who bothered him. Can you recall how his voice sounded before he took precautions to disguise it?"

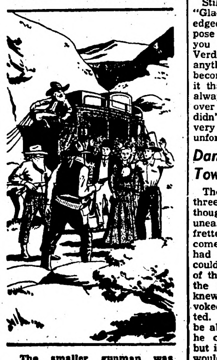
He turned briskly to face the driver who had replaced the mail pouch in its proper place. This time he remembered his drawl as he raised his voice. "I reckon we better load this poor fellow into the coach, Petey. We can all ride on the seat, can't we?"

The driver nodded glumly, letting his glance rest momentarily on the dead man. "Dam' funny hold-up," he commented. "Them bandits didn't pay no attention at all to this hombre's money. All they was lookin' at in his wallet was his papers. Do ye reckon the whole shebang was framed to git him?"

Frazer, Helen Speculate On Reason for Attack

"We think so," Frazer told him briefly. "We'll help the lady up to the seat and then we'll load this poor critter into the coach. No use havin' her stand around to watch the job. It ain't purty."

"Thanks for your consideration," she murmured. "And don't bother to put on that dialect for my benefit. I noticed that you didn't talk that way when you were excited."



The smaller gunman was within two paces of the standing trio when he barked, "Don't pull that gun!"

He wanted to kick himself for his lapse, but instead he simply tossed her a quick, mirthless smile. "Brains as well as beauty," he commented. "And discretion as well, I hope."

"I accept the hint," she retorted. "At least until such time as I understand more."

He helped her to the driver's seat and returned to lift the victim to the coach. Then the two men climbed to the wide seat and the coach rolled on down the rocky grade toward the mesquite flats which spread before them.

It was the girl who broke the troubled silence, her words indicative of the clarity of her thinking. "Do you still think this hold-up was engineered in order to give those men a chance to do murder?"

Frazer nodded. "Looks like it to me."

"Then how do you account for the fact that the killers did not recognize their proposed victim?"

The question had been bothering him, but he did not tell her so. "Didn't they know him?" he countered.

"Of course they didn't. They were puzzled right from the start, uncertain even after they examined the papers in his wallet. It was only when that third man shouted at them that they seemed to make up their minds."

"Then you think the third man knew him?"

"No. He'd have spoken sooner if he had not been in doubt. I think it happened this way. The plan was to murder a man who was scheduled to be on the coach today. Usually this stage doesn't have passengers. The outlaws were surprised to find three people on the stage, two of them men, and they did not know which man was the intended victim."

"You really figure things out, don't you?" Frazer smiled. "Have you decided why the third bandit didn't show himself?"

"I think so. He must be someone whose physical description is outstanding enough so that he would have been recognized by Petey even though he wore a mask. So he stayed out of sight."

"Sounds reasonable," Frazer agreed. "The man carried a notebook which had a lot of figures in it. I'd guess he was a man who had an expense account to keep. A traveling salesman or an agent of some kind."

She considered this silently and once more there was a break in the conversation while the stagecoach crawled across the mesquite flat and threaded a narrow valley where some very pretty cedar brakes provided a welcome relief to the eyes after so much barren rock. Finally she half turned to face Frazer, her glance enigmatic as she remarked, "I suppose we ought to know each other. We'll probably be called on for evidence, you know. I'm Helen Bartell and I live in Mesa Verde. My father runs the general store there and has some other interests, mostly in mines along the border."

Frazer wanted to swear. There was precious little that he knew about the situation into which he was heading, but one of his bits of information indicated that a major source of trouble was a storekeeper named Bartell. That made everything just fine. He was going into Mesa Verde in disguise—and already Bartell's daughter had penetrated that disguise.

Still he kept his wits about him. "Glad to know you," he acknowledged. "I'm Dan Frazer. I suppose it won't do any good to tell you why I'm coming to Mesa Verde. You probably won't believe anything I say, now that you've become suspicious of me. Just put it that I'm the kind of fellow who always wants to see what's just over the mountain. In this case I didn't happen to find anything very pleasant—at least not for the unfortunate gent in the coach."

They rode in silence again, all three of them deep in their own thoughts with only Petey making uneasy muttering sounds as he fretted over the trouble which had come to his stage line. Frazer had an uneasy suspicion that he could have answered at least one of the questions that were puzzling the little driver. He thought he knew why the seemingly unprovoked murder had been committed. He knew that he would not be able to verify his suspicion until he could identify the dead man, but it was abundantly clear that he would have to be constantly on guard until he could make sure. Unless he was very wrong about it there was a bald hint of danger in what had happened back there on the rocky trail.

The thought preceded sight of Mesa Verde by only a matter of minutes. They rounded a low hill and came upon the first of perhaps two score adobe and frame houses. Mesa Verde was still little more than a mining camp, but the adobes gave it an air of permanence which few western towns of its size and age could match. Chiefly, however, it was plain ugly.

Frazer remembered his purpose and his role. "Who's the law here?" he asked Miss Bartell. "Do you have a sheriff or just a town marshal?"

"A marshal," she replied promptly. "I'm afraid we have not yet arrived at the dignity of any more formal government. Border towns are likely to be that way, you know."

"This is something more than a mere killing we're going to dump in his lap. He'll need to be a sort of detective as well as a peace officer."

"No such luck," she retorted. "He's a man by the name of Carson Emery and his idea of being a town marshal is to always have the jump on anybody who brings a gun into town. I'm afraid the only detective work we'll see will be a lot of scurrying around to see who wasn't in town this afternoon."

Frazer nodded easily, content with the girl's reaction. He had somewhat more respect for Carson Emery than that, but he was pleased that Miss Bartell had accepted his ignorance as genuine. She had spotted his assumed laziness as a fake, but she did not seem to suspect that he knew a great many things about Mesa Verde.

There was time for Frazer to get a pretty good mental picture of Mesa Verde before the stagecoach rattled to its destination. The picture was neither unusual nor particularly prepossessing. Mesa Verde was a typical border mining town. There was a sizable frame building whose sign proclaimed it to be the hardware store of one Derek Bartell. Next to it was a restaurant of some size but rather dubious appearance. Two hundred yards beyond was the hotel which seemed to be the terminal for the stage line. These three were the only buildings of more than one story in town, almost the only ones not made of adobe bricks. Even the numerous saloons and dance halls were squat mud brick structures.

SPORTSMAN'S HORIZON

By JIM RHODY

Boys and Rifles

Every American boy should learn to shoot a 22 caliber rifle, says Jack Lacy, famed marksman and gun tester who has taught thousands of youngsters to shoot safely. With summer coming along, thousands of boys will soon have the opportunity to learn if they have help from Dad, thinks Lacy.

Learning to shoot a rifle safely in youth is an investment that will produce lifelong benefit and pleasure, according to Lacy, whose avocation is testing high-accuracy target rifles for the Winchester Repeating Arms Company division of Olin Industries, Inc., New Haven, Conn.

With education in gun handling, gun accidents are minimized. Knowing how to shoot a gun safely gives any youngster, regardless of size or strength, the opportunity to shoot competitively on an equal basis with almost any other boy of any size or strength. Thus, says Jack Lacy whose thousands of proteges have never had a gun accident.

If Dad is a shooter, a boy's principal hurdle—getting proper instruction—is overcome. If Dad doesn't know how to shoot, it is still Dad's job to make sure the proper course of instruction is made available and followed.

One of the best sources for information is the free material from the Sporting Arms and Ammunition Manufacturers' Institute, 343 Lexington Avenue, New York 16, N.Y. This tells how and where to build a rifle range indoors or out.

Of course the best short cut is to join a rifle club. Write the National Rifle Association, Scott Circle, Washington, D.C., for the location of your nearest rifle club.

Whatever you do, says Lacy, a boy's first step in learning to shoot is to know the Ten Commandments of Safety and then to put them into constant practice. Here are the Ten Commandments:

1. Treat every gun with the respect due a loaded gun. This is the cardinal rule of gun safety.
2. Carry only empty guns, taken down or with the action open, into your automobile, camp, and home.
3. Always be sure that the barrel and action are clear of obstructions.
4. Always carry your gun so that you can control the direction of the muzzle, even if you stumble.
5. Be sure of your target before you pull the trigger.
6. Never point a gun at anything you do not want to shoot.
7. Never leave your gun unattended unless you unload it first.
8. Never climb a tree or a fence with a loaded gun.
9. Never shoot at a flat, hard surface or the surface of water.
10. Do not mix gunpowder and alcohol.

Keeping Fly Dry

Keeping a fly dry—good and dry—after you start fishing with it is quite a chore. One way is to make a lot of false casts—and these are pretty effective if you'll pop the fly at the end of a false cast — like cracking a whip. Only of course, you have to be careful not to pop the fly so hard it comes off the leader. Another way to dry out a fly is to blow on it. Still another way is to use a piece of Kleenex like a blotter to soak up the water, and then blow on the fly to fluff out the hackles. All of these things fail after you hook and land a fish, because the slime from the fish gets on the feathers—and when that happens, there isn't any way I know of to bring the fly back to its original fresh, fluffy appearance. The best cure I've found for this is to put on a new fly every time you land a trout.

Maybe that's extravagant—but no more extravagant than shooting a new shell every time another duck comes over the blind. And besides, new dry flies catch a lot more fish than old, draggly ones. That's true because they float better.

With the line and leader all dressed up and ready to float, the next thing is how to cast it. And this is just as important as the dressing—if not more so. Every cast of a dry fly should be made with enough slack to permit the entire line to float on the surface of the water.

Worm Fishing

The easiest way to fish with worms is to cast up and across the stream. When you feel the bait hit bottom, pull gently until you release it, then let the current carry it along until it hangs again. This allows the worm to bump along in a natural way. The current, and the action you give your tight line keeps it moving properly. If a strike fails to produce a hooked fish, try again in the same spot.

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD

● Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!

Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon . . . right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, worn-out feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

National, State Parks Provide Vacations for Home-Towners

May 27-June 2 is Park and Recreation Week. During this week the eyes of all America will be centered on the millions of acres of national parks, U.S. forests and wild life areas and thousands of scattered state parks throughout the country.

The week gains added importance in the eyes of Main Street because state and national parks have become the favorite vacationland for home town America. The home-towner likes the idea of getting into his automobile, piling in family and sometimes even the family dog, and taking off for a tour of his own country to see its wonders.

For example, over 30,000,000 people visit the nations national parks, monument areas and capital parks, annually. As for state parks, it has been estimated that 125,000,000 people use them annually.

As for small town parks, with a real estate value of billions of dollars and with thousands of ball diamonds, recreations buildings, swimming pools, tennis coupts, etc., it could not be estimated how many people use them. The home towns of America provide their citizens with more than 20,000 separate park units.

During the past 50 years parks and recreation properties, facilities and services have shown tremendous growth and influence. Today they make a major contribution to the welfare and happiness of the American people in every community in the land. The small town that has a federal or state park near it has learned from experience that it has meant business to the community. And it is a wise community that advertises its facilities and beauties.

The whole story of the local parks is not even yet known statistically, but listed figures show that 1,465 cities, towns, and villages operate over 19,000 separate park and playground units, with an area of nearly 5,000 acres valued at well over $2,000,000,000.

The man on Main Street should be sure that he gets his share of the benefits and joys that are his for the asking. National and state parks belong to him.

Foot Care in Focus For Foot Health Week

Summer is the toughest time of the year on your feet. So with National Foot Health Week (May 19-26) to remind you, it's a good idea to pay some attention to them.

Unfortunately, many people are less careful in summer about hygiene than during any other time. Outdoor activities and sports put unaccustomed strains on many persons who lead a sedentary existence during the rest of the year, and this results in burning, aching soles and toes that play havoc with posture, appearance and disposition.

Clinical records show that footwear of improper fit or material often is the principal cause of frustration and fretfulness during otherwise perfect summer day. Feet, like any other part of the body, breathe. Constant exchange and passage of air are essential for comfort, especially since feet tend to expand during physical activities in warm weather. That's why podiatrists and other foot specialists are unanimous in recommending roomy oxford-type shoes equipped with leather soles for all-around outdoor wear.

Shoes with leather soles are especially important in summer because leather's porous structure allows air to enter and maintain healthful foot temperatures.

The home towner should take advantage of the years of experience has given his local shoe store salesmen and ask for their advice when they are purchasing summer footwear. It will eliminate many of a foot-ache.

A summer foot ailment that bedevils many Americans to an extent second only to the common cold is known as athlete's foot. The term is actually a misnomer for even persons whose most strenuous activity is lying in a hammock are as susceptible to it as professional ball players.

To prevent this pesky germ from getting a start and to remain on a sound footing, the American Foot Care Institute recommends the following basic foot rules which every home-towner will find helpful:

1. Wash Frequently!—Bath your feet frequently in tepid water, dry carefully and use powder afterwards.
2. Change Often!—Never wear the same shoes two days in succession, and change socks or stocking at least daily.
3. Wear Right!—For coolness and ventilation wear all-leather shoes, both soles and uppers. Save sneakers and playshoes for the beach or soft surfaces.
4. Fit Right!—Feet swell in summer. So be sure to wear the correct size shoes and stockings (a half inch longer than the longest toe). When buying shoes it is important to have the salesman fit you properly. Years of experience makes his advice worth listening to.
5. Exercise!—Limber up your feet at intervals—they have muscles, too. Wiggle your toes!
6. Prevent Athlete's Foot!—Ringworm of the foot thrives only in hot, soggy environment. Wear leather soles which absorb foot perspiration.
7. Take Care!—Don't be a "bathroom surgeon." If your feet need attention consult a podiatrist or chiropodist.

Illinois Legion to Sell Poppies to Aid Veterans

Since last November more than 12,000 wounded and disabled veterans of both world wars and Korea have been busily engaged in Illinois hospitals fashioning together pieces of cloth.

Their finished products — bright red poppies, the memorial flower of the nation's war dead—go on sale in Chicago and Cook county on May 25. Sales will be conducted for the rest of the state on May 26.

Proceeds from the street corner sales are earmarked for the aid of sick and disabled veterans and their families. Every penny taken in after expenses, goes directly into veterans' rehabilitation funds.

Some 15,000 volunteer workers will be at posts in Chicago from dawn to dusk, and additional 17,000 over other parts of Illinois.

Since 1931 poppy days have been held in Illinois under the auspices of the Veterans Poppy Day Association of Chicago, composed of the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars and the Spanish-American War veterans.

COMMUNICATIONS

Western Union Begins Second Century of Service in the U.S.

On April 1 Western Union began its second century of service to the nation.

Organized April 1, 1851, as the New York and Mississippi Valley Printing Telegraph company in Rochester, N.Y., and changing its name to Western Union five years later, the nation's telegraph company observed its 100th anniversary through April.

Because of the world situation and the unusual load of business and responsibilities, the company did not have any elaborate celebration marking the anniversary.

Western Union's first executive office in Rochester, N.Y., back in 1851 was equipped with a single roll-top desk, a few chairs and a cast-iron cuspidor shaped like a plug hat. It was a modest beginning for a company that now has 43,000 employees.

Today, Western Union annually moves some 200,000,000 telegrams, 8,000,000 foreign and domestic telegraph money orders, and 5,000,000 cablegrams, many of a military and diplomatic nature. Additional billions of words are handled for the nation's press and over private wire systems leased to many leading industries.

The latest communications miracle developed by Western Union is the High-Speed Fax. It is the fastest overall communications method in the world.

Over the High-Speed Fax a message can be sent at the rate of 3,000 words a minute or 180,000 words an hour. It will transmit written, printed or picture matter, and there is no limit to the distance over which it may operate if a suitable circuit with electronic repeaters is provided.

Company Linked the East to the West

A part of the history of Western Union that fascinates most Americans today was the linking of the east and the Pacific coast by telegraph wire.

California was virtually isolated from the rest of the country. The wilderness west of the Mississippi was spanned only by pony express riders who galloped on relays of ponies from St. Joseph, Mo., to Sacramento in 10 days.

When the company planned to span the nation with wire, experts warned it would take 10 years. President Lincoln was skeptical. He didn't think it could be done; there were no poles on the treeless plains and too many hostile Indians.

But the wire was strung in three months and 20 days. On October 24, 1861, the job was completed and the first telegram over the line was from California to President Lincoln pledging loyalty of that state to the union cause.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

SEDIMENT IN WATER SUPPLY

Question: Can you tell me what's wrong with a pump or well that pumps fine white sand and after water has stood in pails, the side of the pail turns red like rust? We bought a little home and have a swamp near the pump. What can we do to correct this? My clothes show color from the rust or iron. Our pump is 90 feet deep and has iron pipe.

Answer: The white sand undoubtedly is in the water supply, but the rust is more probably either in the iron pipe or the pump. If you do not wish to take the pump to pieces to find out, I believe the simplest thing to do would be to have a rust removal unit installed. This may or may not take out the sand that seems to be in suspension in the water. Strictly speaking, a filter would have to be put in also to filter out the sand. For the names of these units inquire of the Architects Samples exhibit, 101 Park Avenue, New York 17.

Tilth-Building Soil Organisms Get High Energy Foods from Spring-Plowed Legumes

WHEN you plow under a good stand of sweet clover early in the spring, you are supplying excellent food for the billions of soil organisms which work day and night for you below the soil surface.

These organisms need energy foods—nitrogen, sugars, starches—to do their vital job of rotting organic matter, fixing nitrogen, fighting plant diseases, building soil tilth and providing nutrients for growing crops. Well-fertilized sweet clover supplies those energy foods.

Dr. G. N. Hoffer estimates that a good stand of sweet clover will add as much as 6 tons of organic matter per acre to the soil. The tops and roots contain about 3 tons of dry matter, including about 1¼ tons of sugar, starches, nitrogen and other materials the organisms need.

These tap rooted legumes will distribute the material through a thick layer of soil. Their roots push far below the plow layer. When they have enough top growth in late summer and fall and the nitrogen, phosphate and potash and other raw materials they need, they will pack their roots with the sugars and starches. Then, when they are plowed under in spring, these sugars will be left distributed throughout the soil for the use of the organisms.

Dr. Hoffer emphasizes that plowing should be done early in the spring. If you wait until big topgrowth occurs, the sugars and starches are pulled from the roots and part of their value to the organisms is lost.

Artificial Breeding

A desirable proved sire is a bull whose daughter's records, when compared with their dams, indicate he can transmit a high level of production. Such bulls are very scarce; only through artificial insemination can their ability be fully utilized. It is possible by artificial breeding to get 1,000 or more calves from one bull in a year, as compared with about 50 by natural breeding.

What Einstein Foresaw

Men have always used energy that came directly from the sun, but in 1905 Albert Einstein saw in every speck of dust here on earth a possible source of that same energy. Today, scientists have found the source of the sun's strange and wonderful energy locked in the heart of the atom.

More Corn Per Acre on Midwest Farms Calls For Better Soil Care Plus Plant Food Use

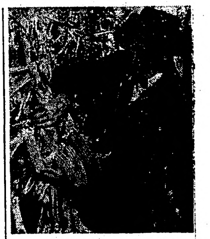
MORE corn per acre—rather than just more acres in corn—is what is needed on many Midwestern farms this year, reports the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee, in a statement issued here.

With the lid off on 1951 corn acreage allotments and prospects of a "feed squeeze" ahead, the need for more efficient soil management methods to build higher corn yields per acre is more critical than ever, says the committee.

Agronomists at Midwestern agricultural colleges are advising farmers to make long range plans now for high crop yields. They point out that the present international emergency may last a long time. And whether there is a hot or cold war, we will steadily need more food in the years ahead.

"The secret of getting and maintaining high corn yields per acre," says the committee's statement, "lies not only in providing a well balanced supply of nutrients, but in giving the soil a backlog of plant food and organic matter on which crops can draw.

"The use of lime and a complete fertilizer containing nitrogen, phosphate and potash is of top importance. Vital, too, is a rotation that centers around deep-rooted legumes such as alfalfa and sweet clover. Well-fertilized legumes, reinforced by manure and crop residues will add tons of valuable organic matter to the soil. This organic matter improves soil tilth, structure and drainage. It conditions the soil to make more efficient use of fertilizer and to produce more bushels of corn per acre.



It's the Corn per Acre, Not the Corn per Ear That Counts.

"Important, too, in getting top corn yields is a planting rate that provides a big enough stalk population to take advantage of the soil's improved fertility. Planting more stalks per acre may cut the size of the ears, but it will increase yields by giving you more ears."

The committee points out that a complete starter fertilizer applied in the row at planting time will get your corn off to a fast, healthy start. It will help speed up maturity and avoid the danger of damage to the corn crop from early autumn frosts.

Report to the People

Governor Youngdahl

A letter came in the other day which made me realize that commencement time is near. An anxious high school girl wrote me:

"Being a senior in high school, I am busy with extra studies and, of course, an added amount of social life. I have been asked to submit a report on mental hospitals and the improvements that have been made in them. The deadline for this project is fast approaching. I need some information on this subject. I can't stay home from the parties. Your assistance would be greatly appreciated."

Affairs of state had to wait until we could supply this information.

I get a thrill, as most of you do, out of the realization that commencement time is here again. It is a joy to see the pupils going through their final preparations, getting in reports and attending parties, and then the final, big night, when the people of the whole community gather at the high school and the graduates get their diplomas. I have been speaking at commencements up and down the state for thirty years and each graduation gives me a new thrill. I can never forget the eager, expectant faces of the graduates, the pride of the parents and the way the whole community on that night is pulling for and hoping for success for each boy and girl up there on the platform.

TRIBUTE TO A TEACHER

I think that at commencement time, when attention is drawn to the fine students turned out by our schools, we should give thought as well to the teachers who patiently and conscientiously through the years have been developing the capacities of the children. Dr. Eva Anderson, herself a teacher and a member of the Washington State Legislature, told a story in a recent speech which should make us all stop and think. She said:

"You get tired. Let me tell you about Maude S. Milton up on Orcas Island in North Puget sound. Now Maudie Milton spent the best years of her life up there in a little school. Years passed. Students came and went. Sometimes they forgot to say 'Thank you'. Sometimes they were critical, and their parents felt that they needed a fresh, modern teacher. So, with bits of futility and despair, Maude finally took another job and moved away. And in that community she left a gap that amazed everybody. Unconsciously, they had grown to depend on her. The old school deteriorated; another generation came along; and then the parents began to wish for the old, faithful, cast-iron type of teacher.

"Eventually they built a new school. What name could they give it? Why, what better than that of the old teacher they had once known and loved? So they went for her to come for their dedication. But she didn't want to leave her job. Then they set the exercises on a holiday, and they went after her. It was all a great surprise. The name of the new school was on the plaque and carefully concealed. But when the shielding curtain was drawn, there it stood: 'Maude S. Milton, a Monument to a Woman's Loyal, Humble and Devoted Service'."

APPRECIATION DAY

I think that a tribute like this is fine, but I would like to see our teachers receive proper recognition while they are still on the job. I would like to see appreciation for their work expressed as they go along and see them get adequate salaries, proper retirement allowances and other privileges which will tend to compensate them, so far as possible, for devoting their lives to this important effort. We have appreciation days for this and that. I wish every community could set aside one day a year and have a big celebration in which all thought could be centered on expressing appreciation for our teachers and the fine work they do. Wouldn't it be a good idea?

CAMP RUCKER

I had a wonderful trip recently to Camp Rucker, down in Alabama where the 47th Infantry, or Viking Division is training. There are about 7,000 Minnesota men in the division. I went down with Adjutant General Joe Nelson and representatives of the Minneapolis Aquatennial. We were told that our Minnesota men have made remarkable progress in their training, and we had a chance to go out on the range and see for ourselves how well they are doing. We found the food is good and the men in general are well pleased. Some griped a little about the climate, but admitted they coudn't expect it to compare to Minnesota. Spirit of the men is fine. If Stalin could see the kind of men we have down there, he would hesitate to start another war.

Thye Says Beef Controls Will Cause Shortage

Price rollbacks on beef as established under OPS regulations were termed unwise and untimely by Senator Edward J. Thye of Minnesota. He declared that he had strongly objected to the beef price order as he is convinced that the order will ultimately deprive the consumer of an adequate supply of choice beef.

"It is apparent from all information that has become available that livestock is already being marketed at lighter weights than usual at this time of the year as the feeder wants to sell before the rollback becomes effective," Senator Thye said. "Every day that the feeder holds his cattle he may suffer a loss.. The average weight per animal in one livestock center dropped 117 pounds in the first three days of OPS Order No. 24. This will continue until the feeder or the man who finishes out the cattle that have come from the Great Plains area, has emptied his feed lots, and certainly no person engaged in feeding of cattle will purchase cattle to feed until the last rollback has taken effect next October. This will cost the consumer a great number of pounds of beef and will deprive him of the best quality as well as reducing the over-all supply."

"It is obvious that the producer is entitled to a profitable operation. It is equally obvious that the consumer is entitled to adequate supply at prices within reason. Only beef will give the consumer that assurance."

Senator Thye added that there are two specific dangers in the situation—black market operations and rationing. "What we must avoid," he said, "is the type of experience we had in connection with the attempts to control meat prices during World War II. This involved the danger of black market slaughtering or operations which endanger our medical supplies by the loss of the by-products of the animals which are simply destroyed under those operations."

The Minnesota Senator declared that one reason the market price of beef cattle has stood above the so-called parity price level is the consumer's desire and demand for beef. The market price of hogs is only 96% of parity, chickens are 93% of parity, and eggs are at 94% of parity prices, he pointed out. If pork and chickens were in greater demand, it would relieve the demand for beef and there would be a leveling off of consumer prices, he brought out.

BY E. E. HALLERAN

THE STORY SO FAR: En route by stagecoach to the border mining town of Mesa Verde are Dan Frazer and his two fellow-passengers, beautiful Helen Bartell and a dapper little stranger. Masked men halt the stage and rob its occupants. Then one of the men, on orders from his hidden leader, cold-bloodedly shoots and kills the little man. Frazer believes the hold-up was engineered simply to provide an excuse for the shooting. Since Frazer is a government agent assigned to prevent incipient trouble in Mesa Verde he also believes the bandits were out to get him but killed the wrong man. Helen tells Frazer she is the daughter of Derek Bartell, a local merchant.

CHAPTER III

More important than the physical aspect of the place, however, was the air of tension which somehow seemed to pervade the town. Even from the top of a stagecoach it was possible to sense the tight feeling of dread which seemed to be shared by the town's citizens.

A dozen idlers were on hand at the hotel to shout questions at the bristling Petey, but the little driver ignored them, addressing himself with some dignity to a young fellow who appeared at the door of the establishment.

"Better git Carson, Ed," he greeted. "We was held up. Got a dead man inside."

The announcement created a stir, of course, but Frazer was particularly interested in the reaction of the man in the doorway. He was a reasonably handsome fellow in his middle twenties, sandy haired and smooth shaven. A gun hung at his right hip while a neat badge on the left-hand pocket of his flannel shirt explained why he was the only man in sight thus armed.

He had jumped guiltily as he glanced up at the coach, and now his face was fiery. He swallowed hard, tipped his hat to Miss Bartell, and swung away almost at a run. "I'll get the marshal," he said over his shoulder.

Petey Informs Crowd Of Robbery and Killing

The marshal was not the first one to interrupt the excited murmur of the crowd. A burly man forced his way toward the coach, something about him demanding consideration from the curiosity seekers. Frazer saw him coming and frowned quickly. Here was a man who could be troublesome, not merely because of his size but because of the unchecked emotions which revealed themselves so plainly. The red, excited face betrayed an unstable temper while the flashing dark eyes were those of a zealot.

His words were addressed to Helen Bartell. "What are you doin' back so soon?" There was almost a snarl in the question and it was abundantly clear that he was not pleased to see her.

She tried to laugh it off. "Why, Father! You don't sound very glad to see me."

Frazer saw the marshal coming then, a gray little man whose carefully trimmed mustache seemed to set a standard for his entire personality. Carson Emery was lean, wiry and brisk. His fifty years had done little to his peppery energy. Even men who did not know his reputation as a gun-fighting lawman were inclined to tread softly until they felt him out. Then they were more careful than ever.

Petey was talking excitedly, telling the story of the hold-up in all its gory details. Marshal Emery pushed his light gray Stetson to the back of his head, displaying a pink bald spot that was more noticeable than it had been when Frazer had last seen him. The seasoned lawman was beginning to show his years now, but his voice was still powerful as he demanded, "Who's the dead man?"

"I dunno," Petey replied. This was one conversation in which he was at no disadvantage. A man would have to be pretty deaf to miss anything Carson Emery said. "He was a shore enough stranger to me. Kinda seemed like an important cuss, though."

"Anybody else on board?"

"Yep. Helen Bartell and a young feller what looked like a cowhand to me. They're both right around here somewhere."

"Had passengers today, eh? Did either of the others get hurt?"

"Nope. That was the queer part about the whole danged show. Them highwaymen wasn't interested in nothin' except puttin' a slug into this poor critter in the coach."

"Hmm. You think the robbery was a blind to cover the killin', is that it?"

Petey nodded importantly. "That's right."

"Where's the other passengers?"

The driver pointed a grubby forefinger at Miss Bartell, but before he could locate Frazer that young man had caught Marshal Emery's eye. The lawman's lips parted in something that could have turned into a smile, but then he caught Frazer's short nod. The budding smile died away and Emery let Petey show him his extra passenger. This time when the two men locked glances there was nothing to indicate that either had ever seen the other before.

Emery's voice boomed politely enough as he nodded first toward Miss Bartell and then toward Frazer. "You folks stick around a bit, will you?" he asked. "I'll want to ask you a couple o' questions as soon as I look inside here."

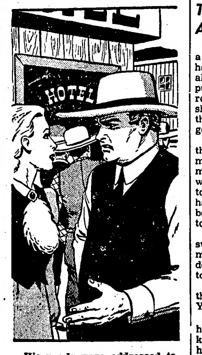
His glance at the dead man took only a scant minute. Then he backed out into the street again, his crisp order directed at Deputy Ed Delaplane. "Find Doc McCue, Ed," he ordered. "Tell him to come get this feller."

Emery came over toward Frazer. "You the gent was on the stage today?" he asked, his face betraying nothing.

"I'm the one. Is that the way you people always welcome strangers in this part of the country?" The drawl was back in Frazer's voice now, so prominently that he did not dare look toward Helen Bartell. It wasn't proving too easy to play such a role with one person in the audience so skeptical.

Marshal Emery Calls Conference in Office

Emery did not reply to the question. He simply nodded curtly toward the adobe building which housed his office and the town jail. "Better come along and tell me about it," he suggested in the confidential bellow which seemed to be his lowest tone. "Sooner we get it straight, the better."



His words were addressed to Helen Bartell. "What are you doin' back so soon?" There was almost a snarl in the question.

A man came down the street toward them and Frazer snapped to quick alertness. He managed to stumble into Emery just long enough to whisper, "Look at the fellow coming down the street from the east. Don't say anything; just spot him so you'll remember who he is."

Miss Bartell was too far away to be warned and Frazer could not catch her eye. Nor did he want to say anything aloud. That fellow might actually be the man who had originally led the bandit attack—and then again he might not be. Better to know a little more before jumping at conclusions. There were plenty of sandy-haired, stocky men in the country—even though relatively few of them would be wearing dusty levis and equally dusty riding boots.

By the time they turned in at the marshal's office the man was no longer to be seen on the street. Instead, young Delaplane was hastening back from the coroner's office, and he came across eagerly, trying to get Miss Bartell's eye. The marshal gave him scant opportunity to promote himself there. "Take over the door, Ed," he ordered briskly. "I don't want nobody inside but witnesses. Keep these other vultures at a distance unless we need some of 'em."

Delaplane glanced at the crowd which followed the marshal and his witnesses, then he nodded glumly and took up his station by the door of the little adobe building.

It was curious the way Emery dropped his booming air of self-sufficiency when he left the street. There was something doubtful, almost apologetic in his lowered tones, and his first statement seemed to explain the fact. "This here's new business to me, folks," he growled. "I ain't never been much of a hand at fancy mystery business. I reckon I'm just a peace officer, not a detective, but let's have the yarn."

Derek Bartell had been permitted in the little room and his prompt nod was not complimentary. Emery seemed to realize his mistake in having said so much before the stout man, for he added quickly, "Anyway, I'll handle the case as well as the next one, I reckon."

Frazer wondered what sort of undercurrent of rivalry existed between these two men. Evidently there was something there, and at the moment Emery was angry at himself for having lowered his guard.

"Go ahead, Petey," the marshal snapped. "Tell us."

Frazer slipped away then, but his sense of victory was shortlived. Even as he headed for the large, box-like hotel he knew that two men had come out of the crowd to follow him. He had sold himself to the mob as a harmless bystander, but at least two people wanted to know more about him. The big test was still to come.

He let them overtake him, turning a broad, meaningless grin on them as they came up. That grin was always a good bet. It generally put the other fellow off guard and it served as a cover for one of those swift inspections which Frazer could do so efficiently. This time it covered an oddly assorted pair of men. The big one was huge, a heavy blond giant whose height matched Frazer's while his weight must have gone close to the two-fifty mark. He had a smooth, baby complexion and round China-blue eyes.

Two Men Accost Frazer, Ask Him About Shooting

His companion was a Mexican, a little man of less than medium height whose skinny body made an almost comical contrast to the corpulence of the blond man. He was roughly dressed and he needed a shave, but Frazer had a notion that he might be the more dangerous man of the two.

It was the big man who opened the conversation. "A little egsitemendt in Mesa Verde, no?" he remarked, his carefully pronounced words bearing just enough accent to identify the speaker as one who had learned the language out of a book. "Does the marshal egspect to catch the murderer?"

Frazer let his drawl have full sway. "Hard to tell what a lawman will figure on, pardner, but I don't figure the chances are none too good."

The little Mexican took it from there. "The man who ees keeled. You deed not know heem?"

"I reckon not. When I first seen him git off'n the steam cars I kinda had a notion I'd laid eyes on him somewhere before, but I couldn't be sure. He kinda reminded me of a lawman I run into once up in Wyomin'. Federal man, I seem to recollect. This hombre mighta been the same jasper."

The remark was strictly a spur-of-the-moment inspiration, but its effect was noteworthy. The Mexican nudged his big companion and the blond man replied with a guttural, "Aaah! Then maybe it wass nodt robbery, but murder, no?"

Frazer shrugged, content with the show of result. "You couldn't prove it by me, mister. Maybe I ain't even right in taggin' this hombre as a lawman. I only had a hunch I'd seen him somewhere before."

"But you saw the man who shodt him?"

"Sure. But what good could that do? The ranny had a mask over his face all the time. I couldn't recognize him again if I fell down over him."

"Maybe you are lucky again," the wiry little Mexican said softly. "It is not good to know too much."

When the odd pair left him Frazer had a new thought to occupy his mind. He felt sure that neither of these men had participated in the hold-up. Still, they were anxious about it. They wanted to know more about the details.

He went over to the deserted coach to get his war bag and saddle, and it occurred to him that maybe they had not been seeking information after all. Perhaps they already knew more than they were telling and were simply concerned about how much other people knew. One way or another, he was glad he had fed them that hint about the dead man having been an officer.

The Mesa Verde hotel boasted a tiny lobby between its dingy dining room and its rather more ornate saloon. The cubicle was unoccupied when Frazer entered, so he tapped sharply on a nickel-plated bell which stood beside a battered ledger on the desk. The summons brought a response in the person of a red-haired girl whose appearance presented a new problem. She wore earrings, make-up and a gingham apron. That didn't make sense to Frazer. The apron was the frontier's universal symbol of feminine respectability, whereas earrings and rouge were almost certain sign-boards pointing in the opposite direction.

The girl gave him a quick little smile that was as contradictory as her garb, then became almost stern.

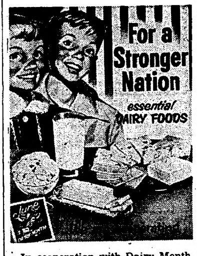
What can every grown-up individual do to help this country progress into a nation of increasingly greater physical strength?

The dairy industry of the 48 states suggests that one good means of building the national defense effort is through sound nutrition. The suggestion—one on which there can only be universal agreement—will soon be put into an action program spearheaded by the dairy industry with the full cooperation of many and varied industries.

For the 15th straight year, the dairy industry is sponsoring a June Dairy Month campaign which will bring out in bold letters the facts on the health-generating qualities of milk and milk products which nutritionists and scientists repeatedly emphasize. The role of the dairy industry in the national economy will be dramatized.

The 1951 June Dairy Month campaign has been built around the slogan, "For a Stronger Nation — Essential Dairy Foods." The poster (below) shows a radiantly healthy boy and girl and such foods as milk, cheese, butter and ice cream which made them that way. Printed in six colors and 19" by 25" in size, this poster will be seen by millions of home-towners from coast to coast. It will decorate Main Street grocery stores, restaurants, hotels, drug stores, department stores, and many other cooperating industries and groups during the month of June.



In cooperation with Dairy Month, June is the month of the Ice Cream Festival, which stresses the importance of this industry. On every Main Street in America ice cream is big business and is advertised as such by every dealer, from the corner drug store to the super-modern milk bar.

For instance, ice cream production in the United States in March was estimated at 41.6 millions gallons, according to the bureau of agricultural economics. This was 18 per cent more than in February and 8 per cent more than in March of the previous year. By June production will nearly double and will remain high until August and September.

Governors in many dairy states have proclaimed June as Dairy Month. So have mayors in many small towns and cities. In many states the dairy industry has organized from its biggest milk markets right down to the home town and the farms for this effort to let the world know of the nutritional value of dairy foods and economic significance of dairying.

Millions of dollars of advertising will be sold during June Dairy Month by daily and weekly newspapers to dairy organizations, farm bureaus, and allied industries from cheese to ice cream, to spread the story of milk to the public.

The importance of Dairy Month to other industries having a direct influence on the home town economy can not be stressed too greatly. Whether your home town is in a dairy state or not, a large part of the farmers' income is from milk and cream in nearly every section of the nation.

This does not include the millions of dollars that change hands each year from the sale of butter to a few choice customers by many farm wives.

And it does not include the dairyman who is in business to sell the home town its daily requirements of milk and cream.

These farmers and their wives, these dairymen, spend their money in the home towns for the essentials to conduct their businesses. They spend it with the hardware store and feed store, the grocery and department store, the shoe and furniture store. That is why many of these businesses in the home towns of the nation are assisting in every way they can to pass on the story of Dairy Month through local publications.

The importance of a healthy and vigorous dairy industry in the area surrounding your home town is recognized by economists on every level. That's why local civic clubs and Junior Chambers of Commerce in many communities lend their full cooperation in observing Dairy Month—they're interested in the well-being of their home towns.

But the popularity of June Dairy Month is rooted deeply in the recognized fact regarding the healthfulness of milk and other dairy foods. Dairy foods, it is reported, supply three-fourths of all the calcium, approximately one-fourth of all the proteins, nearly half of the riboflavin, and over 18 per cent of the vitamin A consumed in the diet. Calcium strengthens bones and teeth, proteins aid growth and maintain muscle tissues, riboflavin promotes better health as well as growth, and vitamin A protects health and increases the vitality of tissues.

In addition, 17 per cent of the food energy of the American diet is furnished by dairy foods. Is it any wonder, then, that June Dairy Month enlists such widespread support?

Ice Cream Industry Is One Hundred Years Old

The ice cream industry is observing its 100th anniversary this year. It was in 1851 that Jacob Fussell opened the world's first ice cream plant in Baltimore, Maryland. This year more than 14,000 ice cream manufacturers across the nation will pay homage to Fussell and celebrate the expansion of the ice cream industry into its present billion-dollar-a-year volume. Envisioned originally as a solution to a local dairy problem, the industry in one hundred years of growth and progress has become one of the vital factors in the nation's dairy economy.

Although the industry is just one hundred years old, ice cream itself is an ancient food. But until Fussell put commercial manufacture on a wholesale basis, the cost and labor involved in making ice cream had limited its market to the very wealthy.

In 1851 Fussell was a dealer in country produce in Baltimore. To ensure an adequate supply to his customers, he had made an agreement with local farmers to take their full milk and cream output. But in the spring of that year he found that he was being supplied with more milk and cream than he could sell. Simply as a means of disposing of this surplus, Fussell decided to convert it into ice cream, but his product met with much favor that he soon opened a plant exclusively for the manufacture of ice cream.

Fussell then opened a second plant in Washington, a third in Boston and a fourth in New York. The New York plant was in partnership with James Madison Horton.

It is through this plant that one of the present-day manufacturers traces its history through the full one hundred years of the ice cream industry. Fussell's New York operations were acquired intact by Horton. In 1927 Horton Ice Cream company became a part of the Borden Company. It is on this basis that Borden's claims a direct lineage from the founder of the industry.

Probably ice cream plays its most important economic role as a stabilizer of the nation's dairy industry; ice cream today solves exactly the same problem it did in the time of Mr. Fussell. In winter, when cows produce the least milk, enough dairy farms must be maintained to supply the nation's fluid milk demands. But with the lush pasture season of spring and early summer, milk production shoots far above the yearly average, and farmers are left with a surplus of fluid milk that can not be absorbed through the usual channels.

It is at this point that the ice cream industry steps in. The surplus milk is bought by the industry, condensed and stored for use in ice cream the year 'round.

Ice Cream Cone Expanded Industry

Through its history two major forces have combined to effect the expansion of the ice cream industry. One of these forces has been consumer demand created by ice cream specialties. The ice cream soda, introduced in Philadelphia in 1874, is one of the earliest examples of a successful ice cream specialty. Even more dramatic was the advent of the ice cream cone. The cone made its first appearance at the St. Louis World's Fair in 1904 and was an overnight sensation. The resulting demand for ice cream encouraged the opening of hundreds of new ice cream parlors across the country.

Side-by-side with a growing consumer demand, mechanical and technical advances have figured prominently in the expansion of the industry. With the introduction of steam-powered ice cream equipment by Horton in the 1870's, mass-production was made available.

PREPARING TO LAY ASPHALT TILES

Answer: The concrete floor must be dry, clean, and free of paint or other finish. Spread a special mastic cement over the concrete with a paste spreader and then press the tile down into place. You will need a linoleum knife and a blowtorch to soften tile for cutting and trimming. Be careful not to put down too much cement, for it will ooze up between the tiles. Such work is usually done by a floor contractor.

● Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!

Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon ... right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, worn-out feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

Just what is inflation?

It's money that seems more valuable than it really is. When there's a greater supply of money than of goods ... when it takes more and more money to buy fewer and fewer things — that's inflation. It happens when goods get scarce, and you and your neighbors compete unfairly for these few goods. That boosts prices — up and up, until the prices of more and more things are higher than you can afford to pay.

The danger of inflation is already here!

Will it get worse — as more peacetime goods get scarce? That depends upon you and every other American. We can halt inflation — if all of us voluntarily will follow the rules listed below. Let's all pull together to lick inflation. It will take all 150 million of us to do the job!

Here's what all of us must do to halt INFLATION*

Business, Government and Everybody must:

1. Strive for still more efficient production.
2. Halt the upward spiral of prices and wages.
3. Buy only for current needs. Hold business inventories down.
4. Curtail all non-essential government spending and support moves toward this end.
5. Save in every way! Buy U. S. Defense Bonds.
6. Support credit restrictions.
7. Support higher taxes to help balance the budget.

IT WILL TAKE ALL 150 MILLION OF US TO LICK INFLATION

Just "Can't Get Over" Easy's Fence

Few years ago, Easy Roberts took a lot of kidding when he planted that hedge of Multiflora roses — along his property line. Folks said he was getting pretty high-falutin'.

But today plenty of people who laughed at the idea slow down when they drive by Easy's place—just to look at those roses. Most beautiful sight you ever saw.

Practical, too! The hedge is a good four foot high now, and at least five foot thick—even a shoat couldn't get through that prickly mass of shrubbery. Best of all, it cost less than ordinary fencing. (Might be well worth your while looking into.)

From where I sit, there's no sense in looking down on something just because it's different from what we like. For instance, some people think ice-cold lemonade's the best "cooler-offer" on a hot day. Some of us would rather have a glass of beer. The important thing is not to "hedge ourselves in" against other people's ideas and preferences.

Tomato Juice

A five-ounce glass of tomato juice gives an adult about one-third of the vitamin C he needs for a day. A half-cup serving of canned tomatoes will supply about the same amount. Tomatoes are about one-half as rich in ascorbic acid as are oranges. The vitamin keeps well in both foods because they are acid before they are digested.

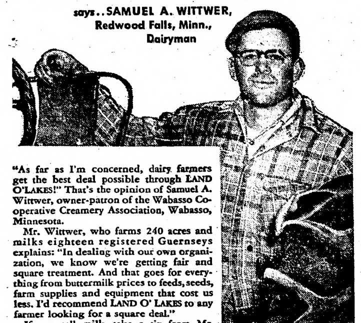
"For A Square Deal, I Deal Through LAND O'LAKES"

says..SAMUEL A. WITTWER, Redwood Falls, Minn., Dairyman



"As far as I'm concerned, dairy farmers get the best deal possible through LAND O'LAKES!" That's the opinion of Samuel A. Wittwer, owner-patron of the Wabasso Cooperative Creamery Association, Wabasso, Minnesota.

Mr. Wittwer, who farms 240 acres and milks eighteen registered Guernseys explains: "In dealing with our own organization, we know we're getting fair and square treatment. And that goes for everything from buttermilk prices to feeds, seeds, farm supplies and equipment that cost us less. I'd recommend LAND O' LAKES to any farmer looking for a square deal."

If you sell milk, take a tip from Mr. Wittwer. Sell your milk through LAND O' LAKES, where every farmer gets the same square deal.

Lime Plus Balanced Plant Food Diet Needed To Fit Acid Soils For Good Legume Growth

Fertilizing is a "must" for legumes and pasture renovation.

CHICAGO—Getting legumes to grow is as much a problem of providing a balanced supply of plant food as it is of ridding the soil of acidity, according to Dr. William A. Albrecht, head of the Soils Department of the University of Missouri.

Liming alone will not cure the ailments of an acid soil, Dr. Albrecht declared. Overliming may do more harm than good. What the soil needs is plenty of other fertilizer elements needed to grow crops.

"Legume crops fail, not because a soil is acid, but because its fertility is leached away," he said.

"Acidity is a natural soil condition in many parts of the temperate zone. It occurs where rainfall is high, and where virgin forests once covered the land. Water has washed down through the soil and leached out much of its fertility. Applications of limestone and other compounds carrying calcium to acid soils, are widely known as beneficial soil treatments.

"But acid soils may need more than lime. Calcium has been a good fertilizer for legumes on acid soils. It has been serving directly as a nutrient for the plants. But it has also served indirectly by helping other nutrients get into the plant roots more abundantly. It helps the nitrogen of acid soils, the phosphorus and potash and other elements to be taken more readily by the crop.

"We can grow legumes on acid soils if we will give them calcium and all the other fertilizers needed by the soil. Legumes which are an indispensable forage for dairy and beef cattle, must have fertile but acid soils to make the amino acids from which the cattle produce proteins. Lime is one of the foremost fertilizers in making soils capable of supporting the protein producing crops. But phosphorus, also, is needed for this service. A plant needs potash, too, to make the carbohydrates from which the proteins can be constructed."

Canada Geese May Nest At Mud Lake

The Fish and Wildlife Service commenced a program of establishing the Canada goose as a resident nesting bird on the Mud Lake National Wildlife Refuge in the spring of 1948. At that time two adult geese and 16 young were transferred from the Seney Refuge in Michigan, and released in the Mud Lake marshes. The same project was repeated in 1949, and 1950, with double the number of goslings.

Survival through each summer was good. The geese, of course, flew south each fall with the regular migration. Up to date only five of the refuge geese (all of which were banded) have been reported as killed by hunters.

In March of 1951, over 70 adult and yearling geese were transferred from Swan Lake Refuge in Missouri, and temporarily housed in a small pen at the Mud Lake headquarters site. On April 27 the flock was moved to a 15 acre pen in order to provide better food and water conditions, and pending completion of a large 145 acre pen.

As of this date (May 17) results of the goose propagation project are most encouraging. One nest has been located in the 15 acre pen, but unfortunately the goose selected a spot without cover, and crows found and destroyed the nest. It is believed that there might be an additional nest or two within the pen.

At least five pair of mated geese give every indication of nesting outside the pen. These geese are banded from the 1949 transplant, and in some cases the banded birds have mated with foreign fliers.

At least an additional 10 birds are resident on the marsh—it is believed these birds are from the 1950 transplant, and of course are not yet of age for nesting.

It is believed that the nest located within the 15 acre pen is the first record of nesting geese in the Mud Lake refuge area since the original drainage project was completed—or approximately the first nest in 30 to 35 years.

With completion of the large pen, and introduction of an additional 100 to 200 geese, it is expected that Mud Lake will be producing large numbers of geese within the next several years.

Next will come readings by Mrs. Hollis Thygeson of Middle River and then announcements will be made.

A coffee hour for visiting and inspecting the grounds will follow the scheduled program. A public address system for the event has been furnished by Rev. E. J. Vick.

An enormous crowd is expected for the occasion and refreshments will be sold at concessions and the State Refectory. The swimming pool will be open if the water is warm enough by that time, and a life guard and grounds patrolmen will see to the safety of the picnic goers.

SENATOR TAFT TO SPEAK IN GRAND FORKS SEPT. 21

Grand Forks, N. D. (Special)—Senator Robert A. Taft of Ohio has accepted an invitation to give the main address at the dedication of the new Franklin P. Wood steam plant of the Minnkota Power Cooperative Inc. here September 21, Andrew L. Freeman, Minnkota manager, announced Monday morning.

The 21,000 kilowatt steam plant, providing more than half of the entire 40,000 KW output of the Minnkota in North Dakota and Minnesota, was placed in full operation last March 1. A 10,000 KW section of the plant had been put in use a year earlier. The Minnkota layout, including the office building, is located on Highway 81, across from the North Dakota Mill and Elevator.

Wood, who retired about two years ago as head of the generating and transmission section of the rural electrification administration at Washington, D. C. was active in securing the Minnkota plant for Grand Forks.

He first visited this area in 1939 when tentative plans for an REA power plant for this area were discussed, and remained in close touch with the building of the plant and development of its use until his retirement.

The Minnkota plant now serves nearly 36,000 rural electricity users in the Red River valley and adjacent areas. The plant at Grand Forks and its auxiliary at Harwood, the latter with about 5,000 KW capacity, are valued at about $15 million, including the transmission lines.

Total investment of the REA in the valley area is approximately $35 million, including the properties of the 10 rural electric co-operatives served by the Minnkota.

The area served extends from the Canadian boundary to points south of Detroit Lakes, Minn., Fargo and Valley City, N. D., and from Devils Lake, N. D. to Bemidji, Minn.

Lake of the Woods Bible Camp To Open

A week of Bible [illegible] will be conducted by the Thief River Falls and Crookston Circuits of the Evangelical Lutheran Church at the Lake of the Woods Bible Camp Grounds, July 8 to 14. The Bible Camp is located on Rainy River seven miles northwest of Baudette on Highway 72. This site, in the beautiful woods of the North, with Canada on the opposite shore, provides an attractive setting for a Bible Camp.

Camp opens Sunday evening and closes Saturday at noon. The guest faculty members are Rev. Burnis M. Rogness of Elbow Lake, Minnesota, who will conduct the Bible Studies; and the Rev. Otto E. Hesla of Minneapolis, who will conduct a series, "Shared Studies in Church Life." The participation of the Campers themselves in the studies has been kept in mind in the planning for this year's Bible Camp Week.

Bible Camp is a friendly retreat for Bible Study, rest for the body, and Christian fellowship. Those who are confirmed, or will be confirmed this fall, are eligible to attend. The cost per camper is $10 for the week. Each camper is urged to join the Insurance Protection Program, available at camp, covering health and accident while at camp, for which a fee of 60c is charged. For further information write to the Dean, the Rev. T. P. Mohn, of East Grand Forks, Minn., or the Registrar, the Rev. A. W. Sorensen of Stephen, Minn.

Children's Day Gains Popularity As Gift, Remembrance Time

This year marks the third national observance of Children's Day. Civic authorities, parent-teacher groups, and Main Street merchants throughout the country are planning special festivities for the children on Saturday, June 9.

The Children's Day National Council plan is to make Children's Day second only to Christmas as a gift and remembrance occasion; a day devoted to the happiness of children in the same way as Mother's Day and Father's Day is devoted to the happiness of parents.

The special Children's Day poster, (below) painted by Dorothea Warren Fox especially for the event, will be reproduced in full color in window blow-up, counter cards and window streamers.

MAIN STREET FEATURE

Thirty thousand department stores, toy stores, infant's and children's shops and gift shops will be serviced with special promotional material on Children's Day. You will see this material in your Main Street store before June 9.

Last year 6,000 leading key merchants successfully devoted 25,000 lines of newspaper advertising to merchandise featured as Children's Day gifts.

Remember the children you love on CHILDREN'S DAY
June 9th

Parents will be badly mistaken if they think their children don't know about Children's Day. For instance, Elizabeth Ann Harper, daughter of the publisher of the Minden Press, Minden, Louisiana, writes a column in her father's weekly newspaper. The fourth grade student wrote in a recent issue:

> "I have been asking Daddy and Mother for a long time, When is Children's Day, because I always hear so much talk about Father's Day and Mother's Day. They never did give me a satisfactory answer. Well, Friday night I was listening to the radio and I heard a man say, Sunday is Daughter's Day; that was all I wanted to know I told Mother and Daddy I would be expecting a present. I thopght at the time I wanted a bracelet that stretches when you slip it over your hand. I changed my mind late Saturday when Daddy and I went out to shop for my present. A green cowgirl hat, all trimmed in gold, caught my eyes and that is what we bought. Now I need some new blue jeans and a new shirt to go with my new hat."

No doubt, Elizabeth Ann will get her jeans and new shirt for a Children's Day gift.

Children's Day, which is sponsored jointly by the American Parents Committee and Parents' Magazine in conjunction with the Children's Day National Council has two objectives.

> 1. It will be a fitting occasion for civic and community gatherings to call attention to the basic educational, health, recreational and welfare needs of children to discuss better ways of meeting these needs.

2. It will be an appropriate opportunity for parents and those others who love children to evidence their love in tangible ways.

Flag Week Will Be Observed June 10-16

The thirteenth annual National Flag Week will be observed in the United States June 10-16.

> The observance of National Flag Week has for its purposes the inculcation of the meaning of true Americanism into the minds and hearts of our citizens; the definite marking of the anniversary of the adoption of the first flag of the nation (June 14, 1777); the directing of attention to this history and evolution of "Old Glory"; and emphasizing the rights and privileges enjoyed under the "Star Spangled Banner"; and the correlative duties and obligations resulting from their enjoyment.

For the thousands of home towns in the nation the following suggestions have been made for the observance of the week:

(1) Ask your motion picture theatres to use appropriate "short subjects" and feature pictures dealing with the flag and other patriotic subjects.

(2) Have stores, hotels, banks, etc., make special displays of the colors throughout Flag Week. Urge everyone in the community to display the flag every day during the week, from sunrise to sunset.

(3) Arrange for special flag talks at meetings of civic and other organizations during the week and appoint a speaker's committee for the purpose.

(4) Add a beautiful, inspiring and dramatic touch at all public functions by having trained, uniformed organizations unite in massing the colors.

(5) Invite civic leaders to make brief addresses for your official program Sunday, June 10.

Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, honorary chairman of the National Flag Week Committee, wrote the following when accepting the chairmanship of the committee:

> "Never before has our country been faced with greater responsibilities in world affairs, and never before has our danger been greater. The free nations of the world look to us for leadership in the great struggle against communism. To millions of oppressed, weak, and hungry peoples our flag is a symbol of hope for a better life. Perhaps it is their only hope.
> . . . "Let us then rally—united—under those broad stripes and bright stars to meet our dangers, our duties, and our responsibilities."

International Food Exposition Week

The week of June 9-15 has been designated International Food Exposition Week throughout the state of Illinois by Gov. Adlai E. Stevenson and in the city of Chicago by Mayor Martin Kennelly, who have invited all groups in the free world to participate in the giant food fair.

The International Food Exposition is sponsored by the National Association of Retail Grocers of the United States, the word's largest trade association, in connection with its 52nd annual convention.

> To be held in the twin exhibit halls of navy pier, the exposition will provide the greatest concentrated food market in the world to all exhibitors. Last year's exposition comprised a mile of food industry exhibits.

More than 14,000 food field representatives will "shop" this Main Street of the food world where every food store product, fixture, machine and method on the market will be presented along two glittering miles of exhibits—double the number of last year's exhibits.

Expectant Father's Day Scheduled for June 16

A day for rememberance of America's forgotten man—the expectant father—is scheduled for observance June 16. The observance is sponsored by the Expectant Fathers Club of which there are 100 chapters in this country. The club, open to all expectant fathers, is strictly fraternal.

> Max Hess, Jr., Allentown, Pa., director of the club, reports: "Everybody is concerned with the expectant mother, but the expectant father who caters to the little woman's every whim, who pays the bills and worries about the coming baby, is entirely neglected. There is no way to identify him. No one gives him the respect, admiration and consideration he deserves. Just as Father's Day to honor Dad was inaugurated long after Mother's Day, so the Expectant Fathers Club is giving the papas-to-be of the nation a break."

Last year produced a crop of 3,548,000 babies. These more than three million expectant Dads were the forgotten men of the nation.

Club Objective Is Child Welfare

The objectives of the Expectant Fathers Club is to encourage the study of helpful techniques and methods by which expectant fathers may be enabled to assist their wives in the proper care and upbringing of their children; to disseminate information regarding such techniques and methods; to cooperate with public welfare agencies, boards of health, Red Cross and other similar organizations in making available courses of instruction for said purposes; to cooperate with public agencies in the dissemination of information which will reduce infant mortality; to participate with other agencies in elimination of the causes of juvenile delinquency, and the improvement of recreational and educational facilities for children.

Sportsmen's ABC's

In a land founded upon the passionate desire for freedom, rules and regulations governing individual actions are always looked upon askance, regardless of how necessary they may be for the general welfare. This is particularly true among a great many hunters and anglers, according to Henry P. Davis, public relations manager, Remington Arms Company, Inc.

"But," says Davis, "there is much more to sportsmanship than the mere practice of to-the-letter obedience to the game laws. A man may never violate a game law or break a club rule and still not be real sportsman, for he may be refraining from doing these things because he has to, not because he wants to. Real sportsmanship cannot be defined or bounded by rules. It is imbedded in an inherent sense of fair play, which one may or may not possess.

"There are certain maximus, however, that are worthy of constant remembrance, lest you carlessly or thoughtlessly stray from proper field behavior. They are not rules, just reminders. As they run the gamut of the alphabet I call them ABC's for sportsmen. They could just as well be called XYZ's, too. I think they're worth looking over. Here they are:

Always practice safe gunhandling.
Be considerate of the landowner. You are his guest.
Conduct yourself as a SPORTSMAN should.
Don't be a game-hog.
Educate youth in the principles of sportsmanship.
Favor the fellow who is hunting with you.
Give wildlife a break. Work for its conservation.
Have the location of your hunting partner always in mind.
Influence other to hunt safely.
Join a sportsman's organization.
Keep that gun muzzle elevated.
Leave some game for seed-stock.
Make sure of your target before you shoot.
Never leave a cripple to go to waste.
Obey the game laws to the letter.
Put yourself in the other fellow's place. Treat him accordingly.
Quit harping about game shortages and do something about it.
Retrieve every piece of game you knock down.
Share your game bag with the farmer.
Take a boy, other than your own, hunting or fishing.
Unite your fellow sportsmen in a common effort to provide better hunting and fishing.
Value, and protect, your privilege to own and bear firearms.
Work for all sound game management measures.
X may mark the spot if you mix gunpowder and alcohol.
Young America's future field sport depends on You.
Zeal in game restoration activities will pay big dividends.

Crow Hunting

It is always a good policy to ask the farmer for permission to kill crows on his property. He will gladly consent. Ask him where the crows have ben flying, and he will give you this valuable information. Protect his property while hunting, and thank him for the use of his woods when you bid him goodbye. This is most important. It builds up good relationships between the farmers and the sportsmen; and finally, when the rabbit and squirrel season is open and you want a place to hunt, stop in again and ask permission to hunt—even if his land is posted; we are sure you will find a pleasant welcome.

Give Wildlife Break!

The heaviest loss of wildlife on highways occurs in the spring. At this time of year, cover is at its lowest effectiveness. Last season's vegetation flattened by wind, snow and rain, no longer provides a satisfactory hiding place in much of the normal game area, and new vegetation has not yet provided satisfactory cover. As a result many species of wildlife are forced to the dangerous protection of the sheltered roadside ditches. Spring food supplies are low; weed seeds, insects, and waste grain are at a minimum in the fields. Consequently the grain shifted onto the road in farm to market movements form tempting and often deadly invitation to game birds and other forms of wildlife.

At this time the mating season is in full swing and results in wide traveling by some species and a total loss of fear and caution in many others.

Trout Behavior

Trout behave differently from bass at spawning time. Bass lay their eggs and guard the nest until the young ones hatch out and then look after the young for a considerable time. A bass will sometimes actually smash into a rowboat, and keep on smacking it until he is dizzy if it comes close to his nest. In contrast, trout spill their eggs on the gravel, fertilize them, and then start eating them—or as many of them as they can reach.

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD
● Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!
Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon . . . right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.
But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, worn-out feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

OUTLAW GUNS

BY E. E. HALLERAN

THE STORY SO FAR: Dan Frazer, undercover government agent, and Helen Bartell arrive in the border town of Mesa Verde on the stagecoach. A third passenger on the stage is a dead man who was killed by bandits. Among the crowd that gathers to meet the stage Frazer sees his old friend, Marshal Carson Emery, Deputy Ed Delaplane and Derek Bartell, Helen's father. Helen and Frazer explain the circumstances of the shooting. Frazer meets and talks to two suspicious-looking men, a big blond man and a little Mexican, who query him about the murder. He checks in at the Mesa Verde hotel where he is greeted by a red-haired girl.

CHAPTER IV

"And what would ye be wantin'?"

He smiled at the brogue. "Sure and it's a bed I'm after," he told her. "Would ye be havin' one fer a man what's come a long ways?"

"A dollar fer the room. Would ye be wantin' supper?"

"Why not?"

"Then come along. It's ready now."

He followed her into the gloomy dining room, still more than a little puzzled about her. In spite of her war paint she seemed like a decent little thing—and she was quite attractive with her sparkling green eyes and red hair. What bothered him most was the fear he had seen lurking in the depths of those green eyes. What was bothering this girl—and why?

When the meal was over he caught the red-head's eye and asked, "Now what about the room?"

Before she could reply a burly man stuck his head into the dining room, his voice practically a snarl as he addressed the girl. "Sal! Stop your damned folly and git on with yer work. Git them dishes into the kitchen."

Frazer could see the fear returning into the girl's eyes and he thought he understood some of the conflict he had seen there. "My fault, mister," he interrupted. "I was just gettin' myself fixed up with a room."

The man came through the doorway and Frazer noted a pair of huge shoulders as the outstanding part of the fellow's physique. Otherwise he was not such a big man; he had simply looked big as he appeared in the doorway. Black-browed and misshapen, he still conveyed an impression of alert intelligence as he sized up his guest.

Emery Informs Frazer Of His Suspicions

"And who might you be?" he demanded abruptly.

The girl hastened to reply. "This is the man who was on the stage this afternoon, Father." Then she added hastily as the stocky man started to growl uneasily, "He wasn't robbed. He's already paid his bill."

Instantly the landlord's expression changed. He even put on the trace of a smile as he nodded toward Frazer. "Glad to meet you, brother," he acknowledged. "I'm Ben Chew. Make yourself to home. We'll try to keep you comfortable while you're with us. Won't we, Sal?"

The girl's cheeks flamed, but she managed to ignore him as she headed for the stairway. "I'll show you the room now, mister," she said crisply.

Nearly forty minutes passed before a light footstep in the hall brought Frazer to instant alertness. His six-gun was in his hand, but he shoved it back into his belt when the opening door disclosed the small form of Carson Emery. The marshal was a little embarrassed at his own attempts to play the stealthy game, but the embarrassment had the effect of making him keep his voice down.

"What job is it, Dan?" he asked "The filibuster business?"

Frazer gave him a puzzled frown. "I wouldn't call it that. Where does the filibuster come in?"

"Then you don't know about that?"

"Apparently not. What's it all mean?"

Emery was recovering his spirits. "Ain't it the limit?" he remarked amiably. "Fellers what work outa Washington are generally one way or the other. Either they won't talk at all or they won't shut up. Bin' as you ain't a Congressman I reckon you'll want me to do all the talkin'."

Frazer smiled. "I guess you know me well enough so that you're not expecting me to say very much."

"That's right. I'll do enough buzzin' fer both of us. Let's get a couple o' things straight, though. Am I right in figurin' that you're out here because somebody's almighty worried about a lot o' guns and ammunition what disappeared from these parts?"

"You could be."

"Then I aim to figure on that bein' the case. I won't ask you what the government's angle is because I figure you won't tell me. I'll just guess that Washington is afraid them guns are intended for some kind of a two-bit revolution in Mexico. Maybe there's even been word that the Yaquis are gettin' kinda restless over in the Sierra Madres."

Frazer chuckled at the little man's whimsy. "It seems to me I will hear mention of the Yaquis," he acknowledged.

"Awful restless critters, the Yaquis," Emery complained. "They're plumb ongrateful about the blessin's bestowed on 'em by the American miners. Right now it looks like they might bust out in a real ruckus and try to chase the miners outa the Sierra Madres. There's plenty copper mine folks who wouldn't like that."

"You mean the guns are intended for use against the Yaquis?"

"It could be either way. This danged town is plagued by all the troubles o' most border towns as well as a lot o' cussedness that the other ones don't have. We're branded by all the usual border miseries—and then we got Derek Bartell besides."

"What's his angle?" Frazer asked.

"The man's plumb crazy patriotic. He's got a few shares o' stock in a couple of these local copper mine companies, but I don't reckon he's out fer the money. With him it's almost like a religion but the other boys are playing' it up for what it's worth in dollars and cents. Bartell's promotin' a filibuster invasion of Mexico, the object bein' to saw Sonora off from the rest of the country and add it on to Arizona. Bartell figures it's a patriotic idea, but I reckon his partners are thinkink' mostly about how they could control their minin' interests better if they was all under United States control. Anyway, that's what seems to be underneath all the restlessness. That's what the guns are for."

"This is the man who was on the stage this afternoon, Father. He's already paid his bill."

Frazer Asks Marshal To Investigate Gale

"What's the gover'ment's angle?" Emery inquired.

"The usual thing. They don't want trouble with a friendly nation."

"I figured it wasn't any more than that. Well, it's a good thing they got somebody down here in time. The show's a heap bigger'n they think. I got a hunch them guns never was intended for no Yaquis—and it's a cinch there's somebody else in the picture now."

Frazer frowned. "Better give it to me straight, Carson."

"All right. I guess you saw what kind of a feller Derek Bartell is. Got wild ideas and not too much common sense. The mine owners are usin him for a fool—mostly because that's what he is. Anyway, Bartell and the big copper mine people are plannin' to grab a chunk of Mex territory like I already said. They figure to use the Yaqui trouble as their excuse for makin' a wildcat invasion. Evidently they're dealin' with some local politician who's goin' to play the game with 'em. The Mex lad will put on a show of a revolution, helped by the Bartell crowd. They plan to have a hunk of Sonora declare itself independent and then get itself annexed to the United States."

"Who's the Mexican leader who fits into the picture?"

"I dunno. But I'm bettin' that he ain't plannin' to play it straight. There's some talk that it's a feller named Vasquez, but some folks figure it's really a bandit leader by the name of Candino. Either way, I'm bettin' the Mex tries to double cross the Bartell crowd."

"And the Bartell munitions are the key point in the tangle. Is that it?"

"Sure. Any of 'em will play Bartell's game 'til they git their paws on them guns. After that it's hard to guess what might happen."

"I begin to understand. Now tell me this: who was the fellow I pointed out to you on the street?"

Emery looked up sharply at the abrupt change of subject. "Name's Vince Gale. He had a prospect shaft just south of town for a spell, but he ain't been workin' it lately. I dunno what he's doin' for a livin' now."

"See if you can't find out. He's just the right size to be one of the bandits. Not the one who shot our friend; the other one, who was afraid Miss Bartell would recognize his voice."

"Sounds possible," Emery exclaimed. "Gale useta be around Bartell's quite a bit. Stuck on the gal, I reckon, although she never give him much of a tumble."

"We'll keep that in mind. Now, have you run across a fellow named Archie Scott lately? It isn't likely he would be using that name but I can give you a description of him. He's in his early forties, weighs about one-eighty and is a bit bow-legged. Sandy hair and mustache. I've never seen him, so all I can give you is the description that was handed to me. Except for the bow-legged part it seems to fit this Gale hombre pretty well."

Emery shook his head. "Don't know him. Where does he fit in?"

"He's one of our men. Sent out here to get a line on these missing guns. I'm supposed to find him, get the facts from him, and carry on from there."

There was a brief silence and then the marshal asked, "Did you recognize the gent who got plugged this afternoon?"

Frazer shook his head. "No—but I've passed the word that I did. By this time I'll bet the whole town has heard gossip to the effect that the dead man was a government agent."

Emery stared. "But he wasn't. I know who he was."

"Who was he?"

"A gambler name of Oliver Repke, generally known as The Duke. He was one of the best bottom dealers in the business and his usual game was to act so damned respectable that the suckers couldn't believe he'd trimmed them even when he put their money in his pocket."

Frazer Reviews Problems In Mesa Verde Mystery

"Did he ever work this part of the country?"

"Not that I know of. I knew him in Kansas."

"Then I think we've got the beginnings of an explanation. Archie Scott has run into something important, something so big that certain people can't afford to have him report it. Somehow there's been a leak. Somebody knows that today is the day Scott is to meet another government agent here in Mesa Verde. To prevent that there's an attempt to kill the new man before he gets here. Unfortunately for the plotters—and most fortunately for me — they don't know who the agent is. So they kill the man who looks the part. Your friend the Duke got shot because he was looking so confounded important—and because I was being my usual self."

"That could be it. If it is—where's this Scott gent?"

"I'd like to know. I'd figure he was dead, only there wouldn't seem to be much reason for this other killing if Scott is already out of the way."

A series of shouts from the street made Marshal Emery stand up quickly. "I'd better get outa here," he said briefly. "Just one reminder. Don't wear a gun when you start to prowl the town. I'm educatin' this here hamlet to a no-gun ordinance. Don't mess me up by totin' one."

Before Frazer could reply the little man was out of the room. His hasty exit left a lot of questions unanswered, but a large part of the picture was beginning to be pretty clear. There must be three or four different factions in town, each one planning to avail itself of the munitions in the hands of Derek Bartell and his friends.

One of those groups seemed to be playing out the game with the copper people, waiting for a chance to pull a double cross and use the guns for a private purpose. Still another must be waiting to hi-jack whatever party made the first move. Perhaps even the poor Yaquis had someone in Mesa Verde looking after their interests.

More alarming than the complicated nature of the mess, however, was the fact that someone had already committed a murder to forestall government interference.

Otter Tales

By... Reddy Kilowatt

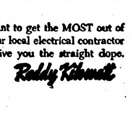
Every so often I get a sort of "squeezed" feeling, like somebody was trying to drag me through a hole that was too small. Then all of a sudden I'll hear a noise that sounds like "s-s-s-p-l-a-t" and then I feel okey again. I been worried about it for quite awhile, so last week I asked Wells Dunlap, line and serviceman at Jamestown, about it.

"There's nothing wrong with you, Reddy," said Wells. "It's just that some folks are making it tough for you to do a job, but they don't know it. That 'symptom' you've got where you hear a funny noise is somebody's fuse blowing out. And you get that 'squeezed' feeling from trying to do too many jobs in a home that isn't properly wired."

Just then Bill Schauer broke in (he's also an Otter Tail line and serviceman at Jamestown). "Here's where the whole trouble is, Reddy," said Bill. "The wiring in a home is just like a network of highways. It will handle just so much traffic. When you overload it, you've got trouble—electric appliances don't operate at peak efficiency, your lights get dim, maybe a fuse blows — sometimes there's even a FIRE!"

"Well, golly," I said, "the National Adequate Wiring Bureau recommends that every home have three wires large enough to bring in as much electricity as needed, enough circuits to handle all lights and appliances, and plenty of conveniently located outlets — plus special circuits for such things as ranges, water heaters, automatic washers, etc., and extra circuits for future needs."

Bill looked at Wells and Wells looked at Bill. "That's right, Reddy," explained Wells, "most people make sure their NEW home has plenty of electric circuits and plenty of convenience outlets for you to get to work through. That's an important thing to watch for when you're building a new home or remodeling an old home."



For Full Use and Complete
ELECTRIC LIVING

"Where you get that 'squeezed' feeling," said Bill, as he finished off a Coke, "is in older homes. Wiring that was done in 1890, in 1915, 1925, or even in 1935, wasn't meant to handle all the electric appliances that are plugged into it in 1951. If folks knew how much better their appliances would work with modern wiring — and how much safer they would be from the dangers of fire — they wouldn't fool around another week with out-of-date wiring."

Well, that certainly makes sense. If you want to get the MOST out of me, make sure your wiring is adequate. Your local electrical contractor will be glad to inspect your home and give you the straight dope.

"SMALL BUSINESS"

By C. WILSON HARDER

An interesting air battle wages in Washington. The battle is bitter, and as so many battles along the Potomac these days it is a conflict between Sen. John Sparkman's (D. Ala.) Senate Small Business Committee and a Washington bureau seeking to protect and enrich monopoly.

C. W. Harder

The Committee is engaged in hearings to find out why the Civil Aeronautics Board is trying to drive out the nation's airlines classed as small business in favor of the four or five huge airlines that dominate air travel.

So far, the hearings indicate this one fact. If you attempt to operate a business without government subsidy, and reliably serve the public at a lower cost, some bureau is sure to crack down on you.

The few huge airlines who also receive millions from the government in mail subsidies do not like the competition from independent airline operators who furnish a fast travel service without all the "plush" trimmings for one-fourth to one-half the fare charged by the big airlines.

Yet, as brought out by the testimony of Andre de Saint-Phalle of California-Eastern Airways, the big airlines reached their biggest year in 1950, yet only 5% of the population travelled by air.

And that 5% was made up largely of people with more than $10,000 a year income, or those on expense accounts.

On the other hand, the small airlines, to which by clever phrasing the big airlines impute illegitimacy by referring to them as "irregular", carried only 2.4% of the passengers.

In fact, testimony reveals that the head of one major airline does not want the common people to travel by air, stating it is essential to eliminate all special low rate fares to "get rid of all those persons riding on airplanes who don't belong on them anyway."

Saint-Phalle asked a very pertinent question.

"Is it the intent of Congress that the mass of the public be left on the ground while the privileged few are served steak dinners aloft?"

Bear in mind that the small airline operators do not want government subsidies as enjoyed by the big airlines.

All they want is to continue giving the public low cost air transportation.

Safety does not enter into the argument, either, as all airlines, large or small, are bound by the same safety rules.

And on this point, the big airlines wanted no part of a public airing of comparative accident records.

But even though the 760,000,000 passenger miles flown by independently owned airlines in 1950 represented less than 3% of the total business, big airlines feel uncomfortable.

Eventually, they know, the public will ask why they cannot offer a good service at reasonable rates, too.

So once again the nation witnesses heads of monopolies protesting they believe in and cherish traditional American free enterprise and competition, with but one exception.

Have You Ever Caught A Pickerel? Professor Doubts It

Save your money this summer. Put it back in your pocket right now, if you're going to bet someone the fish he caught is a "snake" pickerel, not a northern pike.

All you snake pickerel men will lose your quarters. There are no such fish anywhere in Minnesota, says Samuel Eddy, University of Minnesota zoology professor.

"The big northern pike-snake controversy goes on year after year", comments Eddy, "but to every phone call I get, the answer still is 'No! It's just a northern.'"

Five different pike swim around in North American lakes and rivers—the northern pike, the muskellunge, the chain pickerel, the bulldog pickerel and the mud pickerel. Muskies and northerns are native to Minnesota waters, but none of the pickerel have ever been found here.

The confusion from the fact that juvenile northern pike don't look like their full-grown parents, causing many veteran anglers to believe that the fish are two different species. Junior has a suit of bar-like stripes which he wears until he's about six months old. Mom and dad, though, are covered with spots.

"They're both the same fish," Eddy emphasizes. "Some local fishermen strongly maintain that northerns and the supposed pickerel differ in body depth. If they see a northern pike that's slimmer and more streamlined looking than some of his buddies, they label him a snake pickerel."

Part of the mix-up also stems from the northern pike's wide range in size, his variety in proportions and slight differences in marking.

Fishermen sometimes mistake the young northern for the mud pickerel—a member of the pike family which lives in the Ohio valley, the lower Mississippi drainage, parts of northern Iowa and southern Wisconsin. It has worm-like bars which resemble those of baby northerns.

The mud pickerel seldom runs over one foot long, usually weighs under half a pound and is not a game fish.

"A lot of the misunderstanding arises," says Eddy, "because pickerel is a general name used all over the country for any snout-nosed fish. Many people call northern pike pickerel, not because they think there's a difference, but because the names are used synonomously."

The northern has a long list of aliases. In various regions it's known as the shovel-nosed pike, the duck-billed pickerel, the jackfish and on the Chicago market as the jack.

The Grim Reaper struck in Kennedy again this week taking the lives of two ladies as the result of a train-car accident. Dead are Mrs. Herbert Oistad, 41, and Mrs. Melvin Nealis about 35. This brings to three the total of violent deaths which have occurred in Kennedy in less than a month; the other mishap being the death of a young lad there as the result of a tractor accident a few weeks ago.

Death apparently came instantly to the two ladies when they were struck by a special train on a crossing just west of the Kiene store in the village limits as they were returning from church services on Sunday morning. The car which was driven by Mrs. Nealis apparently was struck just as it reached the crossing and according to witnesses was hurled against a box car standing about 40 or 50 feet further down on a side track. The car glanced off the box car and shot back into the train where it was again struck by a box car several cars behind the engine. Both ladies were dead when found. In all, the car was carried about 300 feet and considerably wrecked.

Marshall County Tops Quota In Red Cross Drive

Marshall county residents exceeded their 1951 quota in the American Red Cross Fund campaign with final figures showing contributions totaling $4,650.23 against the county quota of $4,632. Emery A. Johnson, campaign fund chairman, anounced today in his final report.

While the county exceeded its quota, it was still $580 short of reaching the goal of $5,230, which amount had been purposely set higher than the quota so as to assure making the quota, Mr. Johnson points out.

From the funds collected, 54 per cent or $2,511.02 will remain within the county chapter for the local program while 46 per cent or $2,139.21 will be turned over to the National chapter for use on a national basis.

"In behalf of the county chapter, we wish to thank the residents of the county for their generous contributions and all solicitors in the townships and municipalities for their tireless efforts which has again resulted in the county surpassing its goal," said E. N. Mattson, chapter chairman and Mr. Johnson, the fund chairman.

The workbooks for the children cost 36c each. Let's see everyone cooperate to make our vacation Bible School an annual event.

For Masonry Surfaces

The new resin-emulsion paints for exterior masonry surfaces come in soft paste form. The water added for thinning acts only as a spreading agent. It quickly evaporates, leaving a film composed of resins and pigments which give excellent durability under exterior exposure.

Ancient Asbestos

The Chinese called asbestos "salamander's wool." It was the Greeks who gave it the name of asbestos. Asbestos cloth used by the Romans more than 1900 years ago was found intact and strong in funeral shroud.

Red Square

Red Square in Moscow was built over 300 years ago. It has nothing to do with the present Red regime. In the old Russian language the word "red" reans something very fine or exceptionally good; hence the name Red Square.

Successful Father's Day Can Mean Much to a Community

Father can settle back for an overwhelming show of family affection on Sunday, June 17, and—thanks to the women-folk—bask in the glowing tributes which will be paid to him.

It will be the nation's 42nd annual observance of Father's Day which, unlikely as it may seem, was founded by a woman and has been perpetuated mostly through women's efforts.

Mrs. John B. Dodd of Spokane, Wash., is credited with originating the day as a tribute to her Civil War veteran-father who successfully reared six motherless children. And although she worked tirelessly for many years to gain recognition for the day after the inspiration came to her in 1909, it was not until 1924 that President Calvin Coolidge finally recommended national observance.

MAIN STREET FEATURE

Economically, women play an important role in the perpetuation of Father's Day. They are responsible for from 70 to 80 per cent of the total spending in the United States. In 1949 over $100,000,000 was spent for Father's Day gifts, most of it by women.

Mrs. John B. Dodd

In the field of design and promotion, women also play an important role. It is a woman, Mrs. Jeanette Lee, art supervisor for Hallmark cards, for instance, who creates the messages and art work that goes into the hosts of Father's Day cards that are annually dispatched to him.

An authority in her field, Mrs. Lee has some sound suggestions for sons, daughters and wives selecting Father's Day gifts and greetings. Above all keep his personality and interest in mind when shopping, she advises.

But whether he is a corporation president or a young, struggling clerk, the important element of Father's Day is to show genuine pride in him and his job and his interests. That's what Father's Day really means.

The success of Father's Day in any community, however, depends greatly upon just what each one wants to make it. If the civic organizations, the merchants, the publisher, the churches, and social groups cooperate and combine their efforts, it can mean much to the community morally as well as economically.

It is, after all, the father's responsibility to set the standards by which his family will live. With this in mind, "For a safe world tomorrow, teach democracy today," was selected as the theme of the 1951 observance. "Remember father, moulder of our children's future" is the slogan.

And in connection with the theme, a father's 10 commandants for good citizenship have been selected by which the fathers of this community or any other can promote harmonious citizenry through a child's appreciation of fair play and the good neighbor policy.

FATHER'S DAY
JUNE 17
TO DAD--A WONDERFUL PARTY

The commandments are simple and effective: (1) A wise father stresses self-respect above all; (2) He encourages wholesome outside interests; (3) He instills in his child understanding of other people's beliefs; (4) He participates in school and club activities; (5) He teaches his child obedience of his country's laws and ideas; (6) He encourages independence and self-reliance; (7) He stresses the equal rights of all peoples; (8) He teaches good sportsmanship regardless of the outcome; (9) He guides his child's spiritual growth; (10) He sets an example of responsible citizenship by active interest in civic affairs.

Time and again you think of him and quite naturally. You toss him a "hi' Pop" or the like, or a brief "thanks" for his latest thoughtfulness. But human beings, being what they are, rarely find the ways, means or words to properly get across all that the chief man means to each of us.

That's how it is . . . except for Father's Day. A day you can readily set aside and enjoy with him.

Dairy Industry Tells Its Story During June

Main Street, recognizing the importance of the dairy industry on home town economy, has taken active part in the observance of Dairy Month during the first half of June. With still two weeks to go, home town editors report their communities are still planning more activities.

The dairy industry, in cooperation with the local newspaper, is successfully telling the story of its product and encouraging a better understanding of the farmer, the processor, and retailer.

A number of newspapers report local promotions, including visits to modern dairy farms, dairy day parades, window display contests, publication of stories concerning the oldest producer and milk dealer in the community, have created considerable interest in their towns.

For the first time the home-towner is really beginning to understand the story behind the dairy industry. From the long process of raising better calves and growing improved feeds, to better methods of milking, more rapid transport to the plant, new testing methods, pasteurizing and bottling, outstanding advances have made the milk industry one of our country's dependable assets.

Cooperating during this month with the milk industry is the ice cream industry, now 100 years old. Started by Jacob Fussell in Baltimore in 1851, the industry now produces better than 550 million gallons of ice cream annually. At the turn of the century the entire output of the industry was estimated at 5 million gallons. Now it has grown to be an important food industry with sales having a value of more than a billion dollars annually.

In addition to furnishing employment for thousands, the ice cream industry is an important segment of local economy. It acts as a stabilizing influence for dairy farmers. In addition to buying over nine billion pounds of milk and cream, the industry is responsible for the use of approximately 250 million pounds of fruits and nuts, which are used in flavoring ice cream. This is exclusive of the products used at the fountain for making sundaes and other dishes.

The growth of the industry is based on the hometowner's acceptance of ice cream as the most glamorous of the daily foods, which is not only good, but extremely good for you.

National 4-H Club Camp Scheduled June 13-20

The twenty-first National 4-H Club Camp, which will be held in Washington, D.C., June 13-20, will have many visitors from foreign countries. It is the starting point for the International Farm Youth delegates, both for those going abroad and those coming into this country. Last year 66 attended from 16 foreign countries.

This year 33 states have named 56 students to go abroad from the United States.

Assemblies for the 1951 camp will be held at the Departmental Auditorium on Constitution Avenue.

Every home town who had a 4-H club member attending the national camp will find this an opportunity to express their appreciation of 4-H clubs and the work in the community by giving the delegate a good send off. Some communities are planning a special program for the event.

Farm Fire Courses Urged for Schools

Fire prevention instruction should be aded to the regular curriculum of the nation's rural schools, officials of the National Association of Mutual Insurance Companies believe.

Representing 1,200 farm mutual insurance companies in all sections of the country, the association reports fires on the nation's firms are causing the deaths of 3,500 persons and a property loss of more than $90,000,000 every year. A great deal of their fire loss could be eliminated through education.

Since most fires are preventable, an extensive fire safety education program in rural elementary and high schools would materially reduce this huge waste of life and property, the association believes.

Modern farm youth would welcome the opportunity to learn fire safety as part of their regular school work, many farm experts believe.

SPORTSMAN'S HORIZON

By JIM RHODY

Reloading

Reloading your own shells can be a fascinating hobby, as well as a means of saving money. For the man who wants to shoot lots of rounds through a heavy caliber rifle, it is almost a must. A shell which sells for 27 cents apiece over the counter, can be reloaded for 5 to 7 cents, doing the work yourself.

Besides the obvious argument of economy, handloading offers other advantages. If you want to use your .30-06 for shooting gophers and prairie dogs, you can work up a minimum load which will give satisfactory performance on the small target, without sacrificing performance. Factory shells limit the hunter as to his choice of powder loading and bullet weight, but almost infinite combinations are available to the reload fan. For the target enthusiast who desires pin point accuracy, bullets are available for handloading that are much superior to anything loaded commercially. With national defense requirements increasing the load on the factory loaders, it may soon be hard to get shells, as it was in the war years. Save your empties and load them yourself, and you'll always have ammunition to burn.

Naturally, a man must know what he is doing when he starts working with gunpowder. Loading by guess and by gosh can result in dangerous combinations which may ruin an expensive gun, or even cause the loss of an eye. The "Ideal Hand Book," put out by the Lyman Gunsight Corporation, of Middlefield, Connecticut, should be the first purchase for any new handloader. It will serve as a guide to safe and efficient handloading in all calibers.

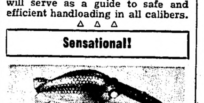
Sensational!



That's the only word that accurately describes the effectiveness of Eddie Pope's "Hot Shot" lure shown above. Already, some of the nation's top-flight anglers such as Mike Hudoba, Rudy Vetter, Bob Hall and Fred Brown, each representing various sections of the U.S., are singing its praises. We, personally, have seen its effectiveness on white bass in impounded waters in Kentucky, and testimonials report it is equally productive on large and small-mouth bass as well as on crappie and even bream in the fly-rod sizes.

Record Antelopes

Wyoming is planning a record antelope season for next September and October.

The largest number of pronghorn permits ever authorized by the Wyoming game and fish commission—45,800—has been set up for 16 hunting areas. For the northeastern area alone, 30,000 permits will be on sale to resident and non-resident sportsmen alike and will be issued as requests are received, without reservation. Season for the northeast area will be from September 2 through October 14.

Regulations for 1951 provide that anyone entitled to receive a resident or non-resident antelope permit may buy a permit and make his kill in the area specified by his permit—and may also buy a second permit for the northeast area to bag an additional animal. Hunters may, of course, buy two permits for the Northeast Area and take their two antelope there.

This northeast area is more than 13,000 square miles in extent, including all of Campbell county and parts of Johnson, Natrona, Converse, Weston, and Crook counties. It is easily reached by car, train, or plane, and visitors will find good accommodations in nearby communities. Wyoming game laws do not require that non-resident antelope hunters be accompanied by a licensed guide.

The coming season will find more pronghorn hunters in the field than ever before in Wyoming's history. Their targets will be the survivors of the millions of antelope that lived on the plains of Kansas, Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, and the Dakotas during the late 19th century. These herds have made a great comeback in Wyoming—truly the "home of the pronghorn."

Catching 'Crawlers

Although "night crawler" worms are ofttimes found in abundance on lawns which have received a sudden shower, or which have been wet down with a hose, they are hard to catch because—coming out as they do at night—they must be taken by means of a light and when a white light hits them, they race back into their holes—but fast! Fasten a square of red celophane over your flashlight bulb and it will be easier to grab up the worms

BY E. E. HALLERAN

THE STORY SO FAR: Dan Frazer, government agent, in the border mining town of Mesa Verde to investigate the disappearance of arms and ammunition in that area, arrives in town aboard a stagecoach with Helen Bartell after a band of masked men had stopped the stage and killed a third passenger. Checking in at the hotel, he meets Ben Chew, the landlord, and his daughter, Sally. Marshal Emery visits Frazer to explain the background of the situation he is investigating. He says Derek Bartell has got hold of the missing guns and ammunition and that he and his crowd have hidden them, preparatory to taking over a big area of land rich in copper ore.

CHAPTER V

Washington had been quick to issue orders. Relations along the southern border had been cordial recently and no one wanted to endanger the new friendliness. A quick investigation indicated that there had been several small shipments of munitions into the danger zone, all of them to dealers in mining towns centering around Mesa Verde. It was further disclosed that every shipment left its buyer's hands promptly, disappearing into nowhere with only the record of a sale to a fictitious name behind it. Derek Bartell had handled the largest of these transactions and had given credit backing to two other buyers who could not otherwise have handled deals of such size.

Frazer recalled all this as background. He had known nothing about it at first, coming into the picture only when Jim Brent appeared at his ranch and asked for help. Brent considered the matter as a routine job of blocking the shipment of illegal arms and he outlined Frazer's job as a simple bit of inquiry. Frazer was to contact a certain Archie Scott, who was already on the job. Scott would have all the facts. Between them they could decide what steps should be taken.

Sally Chew Sneaks Into Frazer's Room

A sound in the darkness below interrupted his thinking. Someone had closed a door softly down there at the rear of the hotel and he could hear a stealthy grate of footsteps for just an instant. Then another sound of footsteps sounded from the direction of the street. Someone had stepped out of the back door to wait for a second person who was coming around through the side alley.

Frazer realized that he was looking down into a sort of stable yard between the back of the hotel and a livery stable which fronted on the next street. It was a place where traffic might be expected, but something told him that these movements were too stealthy to be those of persons engaged in legitimate business.

The puzzle solved itself almost at once. A girl's voice whispered, "Would it be you, darlin'?"

Frazer grinned even as a man replied in the affirmative. The red-haired girl's brogue was distinctive even when she talked in a stage whisper. He was about to turn away from the window, not caring to eavesdrop on this back-door romance, when he heard the man say, "I've got only a minute to talk, Sally. Then I've got to be going."

Instantly the girl flared up, her anger getting the better of her discretion. "So that's the way it is with ye, is it?" she snapped, no longer whispering. "She's back in town now, so ye've got only a minute fer me. I might have known it would be . . ."

"Please, Sally. Don't talk loud. You'll . . ."

"Shut up. Ye can't play me fer a fool, Ed Delaplane. I'm done with ye right now!"

The slamming of the door indicated that she meant it. Frazer could hear the disgruntled deputy cursing down there in the darkness, and then his footsteps crunched in the alley once more.

Well, that answered one of the questions which had been in the back of his mind. He knew why Delaplane's face had been so red this afternoon. The deputy had been visiting Sally Chew when Helen Bartell returned so unexpectedly to town. That had been embarrassing for Ed and irritating to Sally. Frazer could make only a guess at how Helen Bartell had felt about it.

Frazer checked his thoughts impatiently and started toward the door. Thinking was all right, but his game now was to get out there and find Scott. He might be able to save himself a lot of strain on the imagination.

He halted just outside the door as a board creaked in the hallway. That was odd. He had heard no one walking out there.

The door knob grated faintly as it was turned with immense caution. Frazer slipped into position so that he would be screened by the door when it opened, then poised himself for whatever move would be required of him, which was only common sense, considering the fact that one man had already died because of Frazer's errand in Mesa Verde.

Enough light filtered into the room from a quarter moon so that he could see the door opening. He could even make out the outlines of the small form which came through into the room. It was his nose, however, that told him the identity of the intruder. He had smelled that particular brand of perfume not too many minutes ago.

He took a quick step forward, one arm pinning the red-headed girl's arms while he put a firm hand across her mouth. "Well, look who's here!" he drawled. "What did I ever do to deserve this?"

After her first violent start, she was passive in his grasp, her firm, well rounded body trembling a little as she stood still. He took his hand away from her mouth and she murmured reproachfully, "You scared me. Did ye have to be so sudden?"

The question—and its tone—left him puzzled. He felt sure that the girl was sorely afraid of something, yet she was trying to sound casual. "I wasn't expectin' such good company," he countered. "Do you always slip in so easy like?"

"You're mean," she told him, turning in his arms until she was pressing herself against him. "That's no way to talk to a girl."

He lifted her clear of the floor and kissed her once.

"That's because the circumstances seem to require it," he told her. "Now suppose you tell me what you wanted here."

Again he could sense the conflict within her. "I . . ." she began. Then: "You got no right to talk like that. Let me out of here."

He snatched the forty-five out of Scott's belt and headed for the door, a cold anger welling up within him.

She scurried away and he listened until her footsteps had faded on the lower floor. Then he went out into the hall and followed as silently as possible. A din of voices came to him from the bar, but the rest of the lower floor was silent. He paused for a moment at the foot of the stairs, then headed for the outer door. The latch was in his hand when he caught a brief cry from somewhere in the direction of the kitchen. "But he was still up there," a girl's voice protested to someone.

Seeking Archie Scott, Frazer Scouts the Town

It did not require many minutes for him to take the measure of Mesa Verde. He walked quietly along past the blazing windows of saloons and honkey-tonks, listening to the myriad sounds of the town's night life, and what he saw puzzled him even as he interpreted it. He had come prepared to see a wild mining camp in the throes of a boom; a wild, wide-open, hell-roaring town such as Tombstone and Alder Gulch had been. But Mesa Verde was different. It was cruder, quieter — and somehow more sinister. Its citizens patronized its dance halls and saloons, but without the rowdy enthusiasm which had been characteristic of those earlier camps. There was a peculiar restraint here, a furtiveness which branded the town.

He reached the end of the dingy street and started to work his way back, stopping at each saloon as he came to it. Finding Archie Scott by a mere description would have been a difficult task at best; under present circumstances it promised to be a pretty tough job. Still he had to try. Tonight was the time set for the two agents to meet. Unless Scott had run into trouble he would be in Mesa Verde waiting.

He was a little grim when he entered the next saloon, but he brought his mind back to business promptly when he saw a pair of familiar faces. The big blond man and his little Mexican companion were sitting at a table with a wiry old fellow whose leathery features marked him as a desert rat. Just as Frazer looked at them he saw the big man dump his drink in a cuspidor. The old familiar game. They were deliberately getting the prospector drunk.

He kept his eyes away from them after that, but managed to seat himself so that he could overhear scraps of the conversation. It was not particularly enlightening. The big man was encouraging the prospector to talk about mineral signs in the region, evidently quite absorbed in the information he was getting. To Frazer the only significant feature was the way he kept the talk on the canyon country of the northwest. Still it did not seem to be getting them anywhere.

Nor was it getting Frazer anywhere. His immediate objective was to find Archie Scott, so he slipped away quietly, trying to shake off the feeling of impending disaster that came over him.

Frazer was about to pass by the hotel when it occurred to him that this was the very place where Archie Scott would come. The hotel bar offered better prospects for finding his man than did any of the lesser places along the street. Consequently he went in and found himself a place in a corner, his quick glance spotting the surly Chew in close conversation with the burly man Marshal Emery had called Gale. That was a nice combination. Suppose Gale had indeed been one of the stage bandits? Where did that make Chew fit? Did it have anything to do with the red-headed girl's visit to his room and her subsequent report to someone downstairs?

Masked Man Shoots Agent Archie Scott

There was no opportunity to consider the point, however. The important thing was the presence in the room of a man who fitted the description of Archie Scott. Frazer checked the items mentally. A heavy-bodied man of perhaps forty, sandy-haired and with a mustache beginning to show little flecks of gray. That fitted. Moreover the man was dusty and red-eyed as though he had recently traveled hard and far. The gun at his hip also indicated a stranger to town, one who had not been notified of Marshal Emery's anti-gun edict.

Even as he considered the prospects of contriving a meeting the whole matter was taken out of his hands. The door swung open and a man stood there, a stocky man whose face was completely concealed by a shapeless black mask. A forty-five swung to cover the astonished group in the room as the masked man growled, "Take it easy, gents. If anybody's violatin' the town's law about totin' guns I'll take it as right polite for 'em to keep their guilt a dark secret. Don't pull nothin'!"

The masked man glanced around briefly, as though to assure himself that no one was going to offer any opposition, then he leveled his gun and fired two quick shots. It all happened so suddenly that he was gone into the outer darkness before anyone could move. A couple of the watchers had not even stopped chuckling.

It was Frazer who made the first move. Something like black rage was tearing at him as he bounded across the room to where a man was already on the floor. For the second time in a few hours he had witnessed deliberate, cold-blooded murder. This time the killer had not even tried to make it appear that his victim had been pulling a gun; he had simply shot his man without any preliminaries whatever.

Getting the jump on the others in the room, Frazer was able to whisper a quick question as he stooped over the fallen man. "Are you Scott?"

The dying man's eyes were already taking on a glaze, but he seemed to hear the words. "Scott," he whispered. "The . . . the bullet." Then the breath went out of him in a horrible grunt and a gush of blood came to his lips.

Frazer did not wait for anything else. He snatched the forty-five out of Scott's belt and headed for the door, a cold anger welling up within him. For the first time since he had taken a hand in this deadly game he felt something personal in it. A member of his own team had been ruthlessly slain.

A rectangle of light marked a back door and a voice from beside it yelled, "What the hell's goin' on here? Who was that other jasper, and what's . . .?"

"Which way did he go?" Frazer snapped.

"Through that first alley." The man was so surprised that he replied without waiting to pursue his own line of questioning. Frazer accepted the direction and hurried through, certain now that he could hear the footsteps of his quarry ahead.

By long established custom, the Korean bridegroom stays with his bride three days in his father-in-law's house before returning with her to his own parents' house. Official manhood begins for the Korean only after marriage. Even if he is 70, a bachelor's opinion has little influence.

The Koreans' traditional habit of wearing many and varied hats is said to have had its origin as a measure against plotting. An ancient ruler, the legend goes, once concluded that men could not conspire if they could not put their heads together. Hence he required his subjects to wear such huge hats that whispered conversations could not be carried on.

Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon . . . right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.
But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, worn-out feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

Hope "Cappy" Told Him Where To Get Off!

"Cappy" Fisher — who just retired after thirty-five years as a railroad conductor — was telling about a salesman who was often one of his passengers.

"That man was so busy," says Cappy, "he used to bring a dictaphone on the train to catch up on his letters. On one trip he'd been rushing around so much he clean forgot to bring his ticket. Left it on his desk."

When Cappy started to tell him not to worry about the ticket, the salesman busts out with "Who's worried about the ticket? It's just that now I don't know what city I was going to get off at!"

Cappy might have been pulling our leg, but from where I sit, lots of us get so wrapped up in ourselves we often forget "where we're going." Some folks get so narrow they even begrudge their neighbors the right to enjoy a glass of beer now and then. Let's not forget that just as trains run on steam and oil, democracies run on freedom and tolerance!

Back in 1941, when Jens Kierk first obtained rural electric power through the Red Lake Electric Cooperative, he had an idea about hoisting his hay with electricity.

A year or so later he installed an electric hay hoist in his barn, and today he believes the 2 h. p. electric motor which is needed to operate the hoist does the work of a man.

"I wanted an electric hay hoist as soon as we got electricity," says Jens, who farms 3 miles northwest of Thief River Falls, Minnesota. "I know it would make this job easier. Now one man can do the whole job if he has to."

Norman Berry (right, above) who rents from Kierk, says, "It saves lots of rope, and lots of wear and tear on the rope we use. Not having to use a tractor or team to pull up the loaded slings saves lots of time, too."

Jens says the electric hoist is very simple to operate. Just two ropes control the whole operation. He holds the rope which controls the power, while a second rope is used to trip the sling.

Doing your work the ELECTRIC WAY can save you time and money, too. Investigate production jobs such as hay hoisting — you can do an awful lot of work for just a few pennies a day.

Milky Disease, Chemicals, Check to Japanese Beetle

Roughly a third of the people of the United States live in states in which the Japanese beetle is now a serious pest. Quarantine has slowed its advance, says the U. S. department of agriculture, but spread is likely to continue until another third of the people have unwillingly made its acquaintance.

At its worst the beetle is an important crop destroyer. The grub stage seriously injures the roots of grass, and the adult beetle feeds on many kinds of flowers, shrubs, and trees in home grounds, parks and pastures. Chemicals and the milky disease are used for control and protection.

Bacteria cause the milk disease which attacks and kills beetle grubs. Inside the bodies of diseased grubs, the bacteria form spores which live for a long time in the soil. Spores mixed with talc can be placed on the turf in recently established infestations. As an increasing number of grubs become infected and die, more spores are left to kill succeeding broods. This accounts for a decline in the beetles. Spore dust may be used at any season except when the soil is frozen.

Research by the bureau of entomology and plant quarantine showed how to manufacture spore dust. Standardized commercial dust supplies 200 million spores to a scant teaspoonful. Spot-planted, this dust gives relatively good protection to turf after a few seasons. The dust does not directly affect adult beetles, but no adults emerge from diseased grubs.

U. S. Travelers Surprised At Holland's Orderliness

Americans who have returned from a visit to The Netherlands this past year have spoken with admiration and amazement of the country's physical and social aspects, which were utterly contrary to the conditions they had expected.

What excited their astonishment above all were the orderliness, the neatness and normalcy of daily life, both in the cities and rural areas.

Coming from other war-ravaged European countries, as many of these travelers did, they found it hard to convince themselves that Holland had suffered more intensely from the war, that it had been the last country to be liberated, and that its postwar economic situation is beset with seemingly insuperable difficulties.

Strikes there have been and they still occur in Holland, but they have been sporadic and have not affected the greater majority of workers. Instead, there has been closer collaboration between management and labor than ever before in the history of the Dutch labor government.

Latter Days of Jesse James

Life of Jesse James after his "death" makes the early days of this outlaw pale in comparison. After revealing his identity as the famed outlaw, "J. Frank Dalton" confided these adventures to a Chicago woman. After the shooting by which he was popularly believed killed, James toured Europe with a circus. Returning to the U. S. he moved to Indian territory and was appointed U. S. marshall. At one time he chased many of the gunmen with whom he had operated. He went to Brazil with a scientific expedition to study head hunters, fought with the Canadian army in France during World War I and put in a year hunting ivory in Africa. Later he entered a home for Confederate soldiers, still under the name of "Dalton".

How Hybrid Corn is Produced

"Families" of corn seed were inbred for generations. Plants were made to fertilize themselves. This is comparatively simple with corn. Pollen from a plant is sprinkled on the tassels of the same plant. The plant is kept from mating with any other plant. After many generations of this inbreeding, two families of plants, entirely unrelated, are "mated" to each other. Pollen from plants of one family is sprinkled on the tassels of another. Results are startling. The new plants, called "true hybrids", produce far more corn on far fewer acres, and with less labor, than ever has been possible before. Now a way has been found to do inbreeding successfully with an insect—the bee.

"Self Service" for Meat Markets

America's food industry is now considering the pre-packaging of meats which will enable housewives to serve themselves at the butcher's counter. There are, of course, many difficulties in the way of presenting fresh meat in this way, such as refrigeration, special counters, preparation, pricing and others. "Levels of efficiency now considered visionary can be reached by America's food industry," says Sidney R. Rabb, chairman of the Super-Market institute. "Using the nation's super markets as a working laboratory, we can develop many ways of cooperating with the grower, processor and manufacturer, yes, even with the government."

Cities Need "Small Change"

Because of higher transit fares, several cities have had to get millions more small coins for "small change". Detroit has increased its street car fare from 10 to 13 cents; Chicago upped its street car fares from 10 to 11 cents, and its elevated fares from 12 to 13 cents. Transit fares have been increased in 44 of the nation's largest cities in the last two years.

Average life of timbers used in iron mines is threeyears—hemlock five, hard maple three, yellow birch one or two years.

Children remember more about motion pictures than adults, and for a longer length of time, according to tests reported by Childcraft books. Action is remembered best, especially when it is connected with types of activity that are familiar to the child. All children tend to accept as true everything seen in the movies, unless it is clearly shown to be false.

"SMALL BUSINESS"

By C. WILSON HARDER

These last ten days of June are probably the most dangerous days the nation has ever faced.

Whether or not this country goes into a complete dictatorship will depend a great deal on Congressional action on renewing so-called "emergency" laws that are expiring.

Renewal of the Price Control Law as well as the Marshall Plan comes up for Congressional consideration. Already, the pattern of the coming dictatorship is etched over the face of the land.

C. W. Harder

"Price Controller" Michael DiSalle blatantly stated over a television program what bureaucrats want out of Congress. It's chilling to contemplate.

As DiSalle talked, rushing along the ether waves with his broadcast were echoes of the tramp of boot-shod Brown Shirts through Nuremburg, and the heavy tread of the heavy-hearted hopeless in parade past the high reviewing stand in Moscow's Red Square.

For the pudgy Fuehrer of Fuss and Confusion now wants Congress to give him authority to license every business in the United States. Then, he states, if any business violates any regulations he concocts he just suspends that business. The liquidation could be employed if violation were intentional, or accidental.

The charitable comment on his spoken demand would be that he is stupid. However, DiSalle is intelligent. Therefore, the eventual goal becomes alarmingly apparent. His further remarks substantiate this cause for alarm.

For he then says the nation's supply of consumer goods is possibly the highest it has been in history and predicted ample supplies in the foreseeable future.

He is too intelligent not to know if that is true, the law of supply and demand and free competition will regulate prices.

Congress could profitably consider a permanent "Anti-Dictatorship for the U. S. Committee" to be headed with all the intelligent seal that marks Senator John Sparkman's (D.Ala.) chairmanship of the Senate Small Business Committee.

There would be a lot of work for such a committee. For example, there should be an investigation right now as to why American taxpayers should continue to give more billions of dollars to Europe.

Stuart Symington, new RFC head, condemns in a speech the world tin monopoly of British, Dutch, Belgian and Bolivian interests who jacked the tin price at the start of Korea from 74 cents per pound to $1.80. Three of those nations have received billions of dollars of Marshall Plan gifts.

But the tin story does not end there. The Marshall Plan is giving tinplate to these countries from whom the nation now buys tin at these excessive prices.

Watch these ten days. American democracy is at stake. Americans can, and probably will, lose practically all freedom in these ten days unless Congress proceeds with caution.

Rice always has been the basic food of China. Symbolic of its importance, a ceremonial is said to have been established by the Chinese emperor of 2800 B.C., in which the Emperor sows the rice, himself, while the seeds of four other kinds of grain may be sown by the Princes of his family.

BY E. E. HALLERAN

THE STORY SO FAR: In Mesa Verde to investigate some missing munitions and to forestall any incipient trouble along the border, government Agent Dan Frazer meets lovely Helen Bartell and her father, Derek Bartell, who is known to have cached the guns and powder somewhere. Sally Chew attempts to search Frazer's room but he catches her. When he tries to question her she runs away. Frazer then attempts to find Archie Scott, a government agent who has been working in the area and from whom he is supposed to get a message telling the location of the arms cache. He finds Scott in the hotel barroom, but before the two can meet, Scott is fatally shot.

CHAPTER VI

He went through an alleyway between two tiny adobe shacks, bursting out into the open to be greeted by a pair of swift gunshots. He saw that he had come out on the little back street and that a man was swinging into the saddle of a horse which had been picketed there. He fired promptly, ignoring the slugs which had whipped so close to his ear, and felt a quick sense of satisfaction as the outlaw yelled in pain. Then the man was whirling his mount to ride away, presenting a shifting, difficult target in the darkness.

Other voices were shouting from nearby points now, and Frazer forced himself to a more rational state of mind. He could not afford to go on like this. Better to get back to the hotel and play up his own role as temporary volunteer.

He met the crowd from the saloon in the open space behind the hotel, and it was Carson Emery's voice that demanded, "Who's that?"

Frazer deliberately put on his best drawl before reporting the results of his hurried chase. "I reckon I winged the sidewinder, Marshal. Sorry I busted yore gun laws, but it looked like a plumb good time to start shootin'."

"I ain't complainin'," Emery told him. "Looks like there's goin' to be a heap o' guns toted around this town if folks have got to carry iron to protect themselves. Which way did that jasper go?"

Marshal Emery Orders Posse Out for Search

Frazer told him and the marshal issued swift orders for the formation of a posse. It was only when the two were left alone that Frazer asked sharply, "Who stayed in there with the body?"

"Ben Chew. Why?"

"Better get in and see that nobody searches the poor cuss. That was Archie Scott. Somebody got him before I could get anything from him. There's a chance that he might have been carrying his information in writing."

"I see. You mean I'll have to take care of you on that part?"

"Sure. I can't search him without everybody figuring my hand in the game. Hustle it up, will you?"

Emery disappeared and Frazer took a position in a shadow where he could watch the lighted entrances of the nearer saloons, his mind running over the tragic details of the day's actions.

He came back to alert attention as a pair of bulky shadows came toward him along the hard-packed dirt sidewalk. One of them seemed to walk softly despite his size while the other let his heels pound hard against the gritty earth. They were arguing in low, angry tones and Frazer caught one brief statement. "We'll have a hornet's nest around our ears with these murders. We'll have to move fast before a lot of investigators flood the town." Even before he caught a flash of lamplight on the man's face Frazer knew that the speaker was Derek Bartell.

He was even more surprised to hear the guttural, clipped accents of the other man's reply, "We catch the murderer, no? That will stop everything."

He could not hear Bartell's answer, but he made a mental note to ask Carson Emery some more questions. Who was this big Teuton? What was his connection with Derek Bartell, and where did the little Mexican fit into the picture?

He moved out into the street then, not wanting to be found in his present position. Guns were being worn now and it wouldn't be safe for him to attract too much attention to himself while the town was crowded with enthusiastic volunteer man hunters. Most of the traffic still centered around the hotel, so he moved along in that direction, watchful for an opportunity to get a word with Marshal Emery.

That word had to wait until Emery had set up a crude organization for searching the town. From the doorway of the hotel barroom he sent the search parties out on their hopeless errands and finally Frazer saw his opportunity. The little marshal was temporarily alone, so Frazer stepped in to ask, "Did he have anything on him?"

Emery shook his head. "Not a scrap. You sure he was the man you wanted?"

"Yes. He admitted his identity just before he died."

"Then I reckon they got him in time to save themselves. Did you get a squint at the killer?"

"Just a squint. I'm sure he wasn't one of the pair who held up the stage. Aside from that I don't know a thing about him."

"But you winged him, didn't you?"

"I'd bet on it. But if you find a wounded man I don't know who could swear that he's the same one who killed Scott."

A pair of the volunteer searchers approached then and Frazer slipped away. He had not satisfied himself as to how he could use Emery's services to best advantage, but he did not dare show himself in the marshal's company too constantly. His own safety, as well as his chances of breaking the deadly plot, depended too much on his not being recognized. He had to play a lone hand.

Delaplane's voice broke in. "This is Vince Gale. Who says he was tryin' to shoot anybody?"

The lighted window of Derek Bartell's store caught his eye and his mind flashed back to the words he had overheard. The memory brought another source of anxiety. Bartell had left the store for some reason. It probably meant that his daughter was in there alone. Not a pleasant situation with the town in its present turbulent condition

Frazer Stands Guard Outside Bartell Place

He was within ten paces of the building when he saw that another girl was on the sidewalk ahead of him, a slender young woman whose flowing shawl made a light patch against the darkness of the street. She was standing almost in the doorway of the darkened building which adjoined the Bartell store, and he had a quick suspicion that she was watching something.

His attention was diverted for a moment as a rider pelted into town from the north. Men shouted frantic orders for him to stop, but the horseman ignored them, evidently aware of the risk he took in thus defying excited, armed men. Frazer caught a glimpse of him as he raced through the lighted area in front of Bartell's place, and instantly he was interested. The man was small and dark — and carried a heavy six-gun swung low on his left hip. This could be the bandit who had murdered The Duke.

He stepped forward again and was promptly addressed by the girl in the shawl. Her voice was pleasantly husky, its faint trace of accent giving it a quality which made it all the more attractive. She was evidently of Spanish extraction and a closer look told him that she was a very pretty little brunette.

"Big excitement in Mesa Verde tonight," she observed sociably. "I wonder does that rider bring news that the murderer is caught?"

He was about to reply, making casual conversation, when his alert ear caught the sound of a grating boot heel. Someone was in the narrow alleyway which ran between the restaurant and Bartell's store.

He stepped past the Mexican girl and glanced back into the dim passage to where a broad ray of light indicated a window at the back of the Bartell place. Silhouetted against that light was the stocky figure of a man. Frazer knew instantly that he had seen that burly figure before. It was the man Carson Emery had called Vince Gale, but Frazer was not thinking about names now. He was remembering that this was the man who might have been one of the stage bandits, the outlaw who had shown signs of fearing Helen Bartell's recognition.

He saw the man crouch low beneath the window sill, and curiosity at the move almost made him too late. The man was coming up again before Frazer saw that he had drawn a gun and was raising it to the level of the lighted window. That sight drove every thought but that of action out of his mind. Frazer drew fast, only briefly fearful that Scott's gun might not be fully loaded. There was no time to check, however. He had to shoot quickly before the man in the alley could get in his bushwhack shot.

There was a brief little scream almost in his ear and then the narrow confines of the passage rocked under what sounded like an echoing shot. Frazer knew that he had heard two shots, his own and the one fired by the man in front of him. Fear went through his mind, a fear that he had fired too late, and he sprang forward savagely even as the tinkle of glass warned him that the stocky man had indeed fired through the store window.

He knew that his own bullet had gone true. The burly man had slumped and was now motionless on the ground below the window. Frazer stepped over him and looked into the store, the weight of anxiety lifting promptly as he saw Helen Bartell coming across toward the shattered window, "Are you all right?" he asked.

"Yes. But what's happening? Did you shoot?"

"Not into the store. I took a shot at the man who was firing through the window."

She was within arm's length of him by that time. "Who did that?" she demanded, her nerves evidently steady in spite of the scare she had suffered.

Men Accept Frazer's Explanation of Shots

He started to explain but had to break off as men began to pile into the passageway. "Back this way, men," he called. "Somebody was trying to murder Miss Bartell. I plugged him." It was no time to be modest. Those men charging down upon him were already aroused and trigger-itchy. He had to quiet them in a hurry or take a chance of stopping some hasty, excited lead.

There was a chorus of comments when he concluded his story, but the male voices died away as Miss Bartell spoke from her position just inside the broken window. "Thanks mister," she said clearly. "You didn't shoot a bit too soon. That bullet didn't miss me by much." She pointed back toward the shelves which flanked the rear counter. "I was standing right back there where it hit."

Frazer had a feeling that she was talking to help him, assuring the crowd that he had done just what he claimed, but for the moment he was not concerned over the point. The only matter of interest was what he saw as she came close to the window. There was a spatter of red on the shoulder of her dress and another small stain on her cheek.

Again there was a stir among those men crowded into the alley but Miss Bartell's voice quieted them instantly. She uttered a nervous little laugh, rubbing at the stains on her dress as she glanced through the window at Frazer. "Tomato pulp," she said shortly. "The bullet struck one of those cans on the shelf. I was spattered by it. Nothing more. Now tell me who it was who tried to shoot me."

"You're a pretty cool hand," Frazer approved. "I thought you had plenty of nerve this afternoon, but you're even better tonight."

Her quick glance repaid him for the compliment, but there was no time for any further comment. A man was shouldering his way through the crowd.

"What's going on here?" he demanded, his voice carrying a ring of almost belligerent authority. Frazer knew before seeing him that it was the deputy marshal, Ed Delaplane.

"Somebody tried to shoot Miss Helen," a voice replied. "The tall jasper plugged the polecat jest in time."

Frazer watched grimly as Delaplane stooped over the dead bushwhacker. It was hard to believe that he was taking a part in a stark drama of life and death. It all seemed so unreal, so grotesque, as a dozen men stood there in uncomfortable silence, jammed in a three-foot alley where the only light came from a broken window.

Delaplane's voice broke in upon his wandering thoughts. "This is Vince Gale. Who says he was tryin' to shoot anybody?"

The deputy stood erect, almost astride of the dead body. "It seems mighty funny," he said grimly, his glance squarely on Frazer's face. "Vince Gale was a pretty good pard of Derek Bartell's. He used to work for Bartell and they been together a lot lately." Then he added, rather unwillingly, "And Vince was always mighty keen on Miss Helen. It don't make sense to me that he'd try to shoot her."

A murmur of assent swelled from the men in the narrow alley and Frazer cut in quickly. "I ain't up on Mesa Verde gossip, Delaplane, but I'd make you a fair bet that I could spot a reason why it happened."

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD

● Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!

Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon . . . right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, worn-out feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

Inflation

JUST WHAT IS INFLATION? When there's a greater supply of money than of goods—that's inflation. It happens when goods get scarce, and you and your neighbors compete unfairly for these few goods. Then prices grow and grow—until the prices of more and more things are bigger than you can afford to pay.

HOW TO CUT DOWN THIS DANGER. Help hold the line on prices and wages. Buy only for current needs. Save in every way. Buy U. S. Defense Bonds. Strive for still more efficient production. Support moves to cut non-essential government spending. It will take all 150 million of us to lick inflation.

Some Small Business Groups Favor 'Price Rollback Week'

Main Street businessmen in many sections of the nation have expressed concern over the inflationary trend of present day-to-day activities in their communities. One group of businessmen in the east recently suggested that a "National Price Roll Back Week" be designated by the President.

Although no action was taken on the suggestion, the idea has possibilities for home own small businesses who are organized on a local and state level.

The original suggestion was made by 2,000 members of the Smaller Business Men's Association of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut through its president and spokesman, Henry Modell.

Modell expressed the opinion that such a week would restore consumer confidence in America's price structure through the rolling back of prices to pre-Korean levels.

A MAIN STREET FEATURE

In a telegram to President Truman, Modell said:

"The week of May 28 has been designated as National Price Roll-Back Week by the more than 2,000 members of the Smaller Business Men's Association of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut. A price rollback campaign, in which prices were rolled back to pre-Korean levels, was consumer tested in the New York chain of Modell stores. So extraordinarily successful did it prove and so genuine was the public response that the association swiftly adopted it as an overall blue print for business through the nation. May we respectfully request that you proclaim the week . . ."

Local communities, and areas including several states and many business associations, might sponsor such a week in their trade areas as a public service and stimulant to business.

Modell believes that if such a week was observed over the United States and prices voluntarily turned back to pre-Korean levels it would definitely bolster the small merchant and keep them liquid.

He pointed out it would get the present stagnant inventories moving in a steady stream. And most important it would restore needed consumer confidence in the local price structure. He believes, also, it would hearten production in factories and be a tremendous employment stimulant.

Such a campaign on the local level, perhaps substituted for the annual summer sales, and in cooperation with local newspapers, would undoubtedly produce a healthy trend on home town economy.

Such a sale could be especially effective since the supreme court ruling concerning price mark-ups under state fair trade price laws. Local merchants have no desire to start a "price war" as has taken place in a number of larger cities.

However, the way is now open for merchant organizations to coordinate their sales promotions on hundreds of items and give the home towner a chance for bargains not offered in many years.

National Cotton Council Promotes Sport Shirts

A national merchandising campaign to promote the sale of cotton sport shirts is being sponsored by the National Cotton Council during the months of June and July.

The campaign is coordinated in a nationwide advertising program in the transit systems of more than 500 cities and towns with retailers' window and point-of-sale displays.

The program is designed to stimulate sales during the peak sports shirt sales period and offers the Main Street merchant an opportunity to tie in his local advertising and promotion with the national campaign.

The alert home towner who watches for local promotions during the next month or so may find bargains that will prove well worth while.

Swim for Health Week Observed June 25-30

Swim for Health Week will be observed from June 25 to 30. It marks the opening of the swimming season in the United States other than in the deep south.

The importance of swimming as one of the best exercises for the body has been told so often it is familiar to all Americans. But what most people will have forgotten is the painful lesson learned last year—blistered noses, peeling shoulders, and horrid discomfort of over exposure to the sizzling sun. Forgotten will be the ruined vacations, the blighted weekend, the costly doctor's bill; time and money lost because this elementary truth was ignored—"without proper protection, the sun sears the human hide."

Fresh air and sunlight are good or the body, but over-exposure to sun can be harmful and even dangerous.

The corner drug store in every home town has a supply of recommended and tested skin lotions that will protect the skin and still allow the bather to get an even, benefiting tan.

It's just good common sense to protect yourself from sunburn. It will insure a happy Swim Week and vacation time.

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION

Which Way Does Pig's Tail Curl? Question Stumps Many Farmers

Which way does a pig's tail curl? The home towners and rural readers of this article might be surprised by the answer, and possibly a few will rush out to the barnyard to find out.

That question was printed in Dr. Hess's Barnyard Gravure recently with a sketch of a pig with its tail curled to the left. Readers were invited to write and give their opinions and observations. Over 1,000 letters and post cards were received.

Here's a tabulation of the replies: 32 per cent said a pig's tail cruls clockwise (or right); 13 per cent said a pig's tail curls left; and 55 per cent said it curls either way—and that's correct.

The most surprising thing was how many folks had never paid any attention to that portion of a pig's anatomy; had never had the question raised.

Some interesting farm beliefs came to light in the replies. Quite a few farmers said that if a sow's tail curls to the right, that's a sign of a good brood sow. Others were just as certain that a left curl was a sign of a good brood sow. Some folks said it was a matter of sex, some thought it was the breed that determines the direction of the curl.

Many a reply said: "I didn't know, but I went out and looked at our hogs." Several sent snapshots of their pigs in evidence. Some of the vo-ag teachers had their students make counts on pigs in their projects and sent the tabulation of right curls and left curls.

One country school teacher in Michigan had all the fourth grade pupils look the matter up and write a reply, then all the letters were sent to the Gravure in one envelope.

Although the sketch was printed in Junior's Corner of the Barnyard Gravure, the letters came from oldsters as well as youngsters. A Michigan farmer wrote: "I am 70 years old and have lived on a farm all my life. I never saw a pig with its tail curled to the left." A West Virginia farmer, 65, correctly observed that tails can curl either way. A farmer's wife in Texas said: "My husband and I went out and looked, just to make sure."

An Oklahoma FFA boy who has raised, fed, exhibited and judged hogs for three years said the curl of the tail had never been called to his attention.

Another young farmer who had really spent some time watching his pigs came up with this observation: "A pig seems to have perfect control. While I watched them, some pigs curled their tails left, then let them uncurl and twisted them to the right."

One point on which many agreed was the importance of curl in a pig's tail. A curled tail, they allowed, was a sign that a pig is feeling good, doing well. A sick pig, or a chilled pig, usually lets its tail hang straight.

Farmers Use Twice as Many Tractors

American farmers face the current national emergency with twice as much mechanized equipment and half as many horses as they possessed before World War II, a recent survey revealed.

According to B. F. Goodrich company the farm tractor population has topped 4,000,000 for the first time. This rapid mechanization of farms since 1945 has been made necessary by increased U.S. population, workers deserting farms for city jobs, and higher food consumption by our armed forces in many parts of the world.

Not only are U.S. farmers operating more tractors, but they are using them about 100 hours more each year than they did a decade ago. Approximately 5,000,000 horses still are in use on farms, compared to over 10,000,000 in 1941. These work animals will supply less than a third of the power need on farms this year.

Chocolate Now Goes To War For Taste and Tonic

The popular energy food is considered so important to the G.I. that it is now included in every operational ration issued by the Department of Defense.

Food Packet Survival Arctic, for example, provides no less than four chocolate bars—two with almonds—per man per day. Soldiers going to the front lines for eight to ten hours are issued two one-ounce bars in their Food Packet Individual Assault. Ration C—the basic canned operational ration—offers both chocolate and cocoa disks.

Three-fourths of the candy component in the 5-in-1 Ration, designed for group use, contains chocolate, while the Ration Supplement Sundries Pack, for 100 men, includes 200 two-ounce chocolate and 48 two-ounce chocolate-covered bars.

The fighting man in Korea is not only getting a dose of energy with his chocolate but something tasty as well. This was not entirely true during World War II, despite the fact that millions of chocolate bars were consumed across the globe in the form of Emergency Ration D. This ration—containing four ounces of chocolate and some 600 calories—was designed especially to taste "no better than an unsalted baked potato" in order to keep the G.I. from eating it as candy.

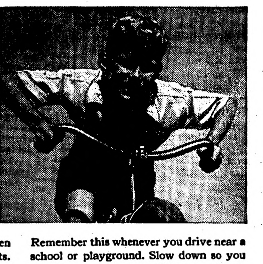
Today, the army's new chocolate policy is to give the men the nourishing food in the form of sweets they have eaten and enjoyed since they were kids. In encouraging the use of chocolate the military may well be remembering the words of the Spanish explorer, Cortez, who wrote in the 16th century, "A single cup of this rich drink gives a man sufficient strength to march all day."

Although Cortez was quick to recognize the energy value of chocolate—a product of the native American cacao tree—he did not appreciate its taste as prepared by the Aztec Indians. When he introduced the food into Spain in 1528 it was used primarily as a medicine and was far too expensive for anyone except the rich.

An unknown genius added sugar to give chocolate its first wide taste appeal, but it was not until the 19th century that the price fell low enough to make it a popular beverage with all classes. In the United States alone, raw cacao imports leaped from 500,000 pounds in 1780 to more than 600 million pounds by 1946.

A room that is inclined to be dark and rather gloomy can be given a sunshiny aspect by painting the walls a pale tint of yellow. A ceiling painted white will reflect the maximum light that falls upon it. In one such room, the wood-trim was coated in a grayed-lavender tone and draperies were a silvery gray. The upholstery combined blue-green and gray and tangerine toned accessories added gayety and life to the room's decoration.

"Hush-A-Bye, Baby" is the theme song in the home of an Oriental silk farmer when his silkworms begin to spin their cocoons. The family talks in whispers and walks on tiptoe, for silkworms will cease the spinning process when frightened. Many silk raisers share their homes with the productive little moth larvae.



HELP! This boy's in danger

Last year 120,000 school-age children were injured or killed in traffic accidents. Many of these accidents could have been prevented if the drivers had learned to regard all youngsters as human caution signs.

Remember this whenever you drive near a school or playground. Slow down so you can stop in an instant. You never know when a child may decide to dash out from between parked cars.

22 YEAR OLD FARMER KILLED IN ACCIDENT

A tragedy occurred yesterday (Tuesday) at Crookston when Walter Weber, 22, was killed when a truck ran over his head and legs, resulting in death fifteen minutes later.

Mr. Weber was the husband of the former Helen Haugen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Haugen of Middle River. The Webers were married a year ago last month, and a baby had just been born to them. Helen had been discharged from the hospital the day before with the baby, and Mrs. Haugen had driven down to Crookston to be with the Webers.

When informed of the accident, Rupert and Clarence Haugen drove to Crookston to be with the family.

Walter and his father were in the contracting business. Walter was operating a dragline in a gravel pit and after filling all the trucks, he had an hour and a half wait before the trucks returned. He had laid down near the dragline, right in the road and had gone to sleep evidently laying down to sleep in the best place.

JUDGE HAS BUSY WEEK IN MIDDLE RIVER COURT

Judge W. J. McDowell has had a busy week in court. Ten cases were heard, nine of which were brought in for hearing by the Minnesota Highway Patrol.

On Wednesday, June 13th, Wm. Ostrand and Louis Larson of Strandquist, Conrad Engelsrud, Arthur Skadsem and Elmer Johnson, all of Newfolden were brought in on a charge of failing to stop for a stop sign. They pleaded guilty and were given a fine and assessed costs.

On June 16 Russell R. Williams Dalos of Goodridge was brought in on a similar charge, to which he pleaded guilty.

On June 18th Chester William Berg of Strandquist and Carl Dalos of Goodridge were brought in for failing to stop for a stop sign. They pleaded guilty and were fined and assessed costs.

Edward Eliason of Goodridge was brought in on Monday for improper license on his car. He pleaded guilty and was given a fine and assessed costs.

Octave L. Saize of Roseau was brought in Monday by Constable Charles Lamb on a public intoxication charge. He pleaded guilty and was fined and assessed costs.

Evidently the highway patrol is watching for people going thru stop signs. It's a good idea to stop when you come to a sign that says "stop."

Always

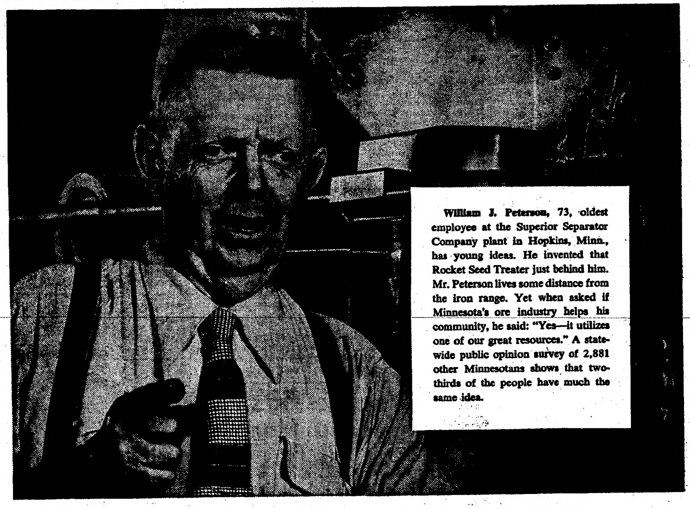
Especially when it's a "gift horse" called public power whether federal, state or municipal.

Agitators for public ownership of light and power companies argue that public power is cheaper -- in other words, that you get something for nothing. Since all of us like the idea, lots of folks are unknowingly mislead.

What are the facts? Schemes for government railroads, socialized medicine and public power are paid for with tax money -- YOUR tax money, which already amounts to 31c out of each dollar you earn. You can stop this increasing drain on your pocketbook by taking a firm stand against government in business, whether it's your business or the other fellow's.

Your electric company -- a development of free enterprise through private initiative -- is your best source of low-cost electricity.

OTTER TAIL POWER COMPANY



William J. Peterson, 73, oldest employee at the Superior Separator Company plant in Hopkins, Minn., has young ideas. He invented that Rocket Seed Treater just behind him. Mr. Peterson lives some distance from the iron range. Yet when asked if Minnesota's ore industry helps his community, he said: "Yes—it utilizes one of our great resources." A statewide public opinion survey of 2,881 other Minnesotans shows that two-thirds of the people have much the same idea.

"Does Minnesota's iron ore industry help your community?"

POLL FINDINGS:

63% of Minnesota citizens say YES...
35% say NO...2% DON'T KNOW.
What do you say?

You don't have to live on the Mesabi Range to say, "Sure, the iron ore industry helps my community." As the survey shows, two out of every three Minnesotans "vote" this way, while only one-tenth of the state's people live on or near the iron ranges. How do you benefit?—

Do you help support the schools? The iron ore industry helps, too — right in your community. More than 75% of the school aids which your school gets from interest on the state trust funds comes from iron ore—the royalties on state-owned mines and the occupation tax have contributed $155,000,000 toward building up those trust funds, and they are still growing.

Do you sell farm products? The iron range country doesn't begin to grow all the food it eats. It's a big-buying, year-around customer of farms all over the state.

Are you in business? Part of your income may come from mining operations. Small and large contractors from all over the state get contracts from ore producers for stripping mines, building roads, selling timber, machinery, equipment and supplies. These purchases run to nearly $100 million a year.

What do you buy? Part of what you pay for most anything is railway freight costs. The large revenues from iron ore received by railways like the Great Northern, Northern Pacific and the Soo Line help hold down general freight rate levels all over Minnesota.

Do you pay taxes? So do Minnesota's ore producers—and plenty of them. The $31.5 millions they paid last year naturally helped ease your own tax load.

If you want benefits like these to keep coming to your community, there is one more thing you should know. The ore producers of Minnesota are putting millions of dollars into research to learn how to commercially produce the state's huge deposits of low-grade and taconite ores. With fair tax treatment — on all types of ore—Minnesota can expect the ore industry to keep benefiting its towns and cities for generations to come.

Like to know more about the iron ore industry and what it means to Minnesota? Write to the Iron Mining Industry of Minnesota, 506 Sellwood Building, Duluth, for a free copy of a handsomely illustrated booklet, "The New Era in Minnesota Iron Mining."

Independence Day

The first celebration of the Declaration of Independence was not held on July 4. It was held on July 8, 1776—four days after Congress officially adopted the historic document.

According to research experts with the World Book Encyclopedia, patriots who gathered in Philadelphia's Independence Square are credited with originating what has been an annual celebration ever since. The great crowd heard John Nixon, prominent Philadelphian, read the entire Declaration. He stood on a towering platform erected seven years earlier by the American Philosophical Society for the observation of a rare phenomenon involving the planet Venus.

Bells pealed throughout the day. John Adams' letters mention chimes, possibly those of Christ Church. As the rector of the church was a well-known Royalist, the chimes probably were "rung without benefit of clergy."

Not until July 2 of the following year did it occur to the Philadelphians that the celebration should be repeated on July 4.

A letter written by John Adams to his daughter tells the story of the next July 4, in 1777. Again bells pealed throughout the day. Warships anchored in the river were gaily decorated. Bonfires and fireworks lit the sky in the evening. Candles burned in the windows of nearly every home.

Congress adjourned for the day. The government dignitaries enjoyed a special dinner in a Philadelphia tavern, with music by a Hessian band, which had been captured at Trenton. During the after-dinner toasts, soldiers outside the tavern fired continuous volleys.

According to the World Book researchers, this annual celebration of the Fourth of July spread slowly throughout the country. But, even today, July 4 is not a national holiday by United States law.

"I Fill My Barn Twice as Fast With Half the Help"

Says Ted M. Lee, Kindred, N. D.

Ted M. Lee, who farms 2 miles south of Kindred, North Dakota, has a custom-made electrically-operated hay and straw bale conveyor which he claims saves him untold hours of time and work.

"Since I've had the conveyor in operation," says Lee, "I can fill my barn twice as fast with half the help."

Lee, who developed the idea himself, had the conveyor made to order commercially.

Here's how it works in his 100-foot barn. The conveyor, on casters, is rolled to either end of the hay mow. An electrically-operated elevator hoists the bales from the ground to the mow door. They drop on Lee's conveyor and are carried one-third the length of the barn. When the opposite end of the barn is used, the conveyor is simply rolled into place, and the 2 H. P. electric motor reversed.

"The operation is fast," says Lee, "and we don't have to carry the bales over 15 feet."

The Lees, members of Case County Electric Co-operative, are "100% electrified." "In fact," says Ted, "we're in a position where we can't afford to be without electricity. I figure electricity saves me $175 a month on help I don't have to hire."

On production jobs such as Ted Lee's conveyor, or in the farm home, rural electric power is the greatest convenience you've ever had. Use it all you can, because it does so much, yet costs so little.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

If the man of the house works with metal and gets metal dust or filings on his clothes and in his hair, take steps to prevent the rust marks that will naturally result when his work clothes and pillowcases are laundered. In fact, one step will do it: soak the articles in a large vessel of cleaning fluid before washing so that the metal particles will come out of the cloth and settle to the bottom of the fluid.

The dog's habit of sleeping on the furniture is easily cured. Before going to bed, set a number of small spring mousetraps on the dog's favorite resting places. They won't hurt him, unless he happens to get his tail in one and even that isn't usually fatal, but the snapping traps will scare the daylights out of him and impress him with the advisability of sleeping elsewhere.

When bare spots show up on the back of a mirror they can be repaired by covering them with tin foil. Secure the tinfoil to the glass with shellac, dark paint, or glue

Mercurochrome is partially soluble in water, but it's extremely soluble in rubbing alcohol which has been diluted with a few drops of hydrochloric acid. Just use this solution as you would cleaning fluid, sponging it on the spots with cheesecloth.

Turpentine, kerosene and cleaning fluid are all good solvents to use on paint spots, but none is very reliable if you allow the stains to get stale. For stale paint stains, try combining equal parts of turpentine and acetone, as long as the fabric involved is not acetate rayon, and use it as you would ordinary cleaning fluid.

Scrubbing brushes, like brooms, should never be rested on their bristles nor on their handles, since this lets the water soak into the wood at the base of the bristles and loosen them up. Keep your scrubbing brush on its edge when it's not in use.

When the broom finally is worn out, trim the bristles down to an even length, cover with old flannel or felt (a discarded felt hat will work), and you've got a handy floor polisher.

Evaluation of Responsibilities Important to Local Merchants

Independence Day affords our Main Street merchants little, if any, opportunity for merchaindising. But it is a day which gives the home town businessman, in this or any community, time and inspiration to consider his responsibilities to the community.

One good way to point out the local merchant's importance to his community is to compare him with the city merchant. In fact, they are brothers in name only. The city merchant may have thousands of customers, hundreds of employees and operate as a "big business". The head of the firm in all probability will direct the activities of his store from a private office with directives through department heads. There is nothing personal or intimate in the organization.

A MAIN STREET FEATURE

On the other hand, the local merchant is on intimate terms with his customers, knowing many of them as friends and others by name. He works with his clerks behind the counter and knows their problems both in the store and at home. And with this knowledge his responsibilities to them increases.

As for the community as a whole, the local merchant must realize that it is the community that keeps him in business, provides his living, his home and his social activities. For this it is only fair that the merchant give something in return.

Most local merchants today realize these facts and are always the first to offer services and funds for any project for Community betterment. That is why in many small towns the merchants have formed organizations to promote the community, not for their own commercial advantage as many of the public suspect, but for the community as a whole.

Independence Day, therefore, with its deep meaning of freedom, justice, and equality is the ideal time for Main Street businessmen across the nation to analyze the local situation economically, socially and spiritually. It is a good time for each merchant to ask himself if he is doing his part in promoting the community and the American way of life.

A local merchant who takes his responsibility to his community seriously could start his analysis of his business and home town with his employees. Discontented employees are a bad advertisement for any business and any home town. Perhaps a little encouragement and interest upon the part of an employer will make a better employee and a better citizen.

There are too many economical responsibilities of the local merchant to discuss them all. But the merchant might continue his analysis by asking himself if he gives his customers the best possible merchandise at the best possible price. It is not good business to get "all the traffic will bear." It hurts the customer financially and thus the entire community.

The social and spiritual attitude of any man is his own personal problem and one that must be worked out by the individual. But the merchant's spiritual and social behavior has greater effect on the community as a whole than that of the average man.

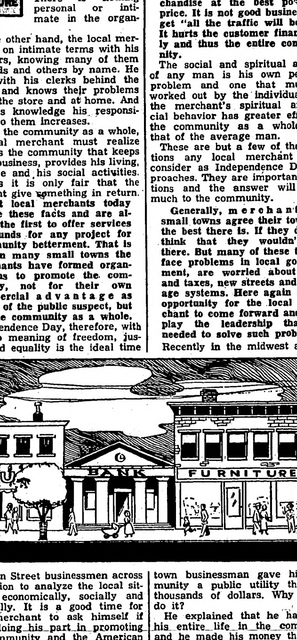
These are but a few of the questions any local merchant might consider as Independence Day approaches. They are important questions and the answer will mean much to the community.

Generally, merchants in small towns agree their town is the best there is. If they didn't think that they wouldn't be there. But many of these towns face problems in local government, are worried about war and taxes, new streets and sewage systems. Here again is an opportunity for the local merchant to come forward and display the leadership that is needed to solve such problems.

Recently in the midwest a small town businessman gave his community a public utility that cost thousands of dollars. Why did he do it?

He explained that he had lived his entire life in the community and he made his money there. He liked the town. He wanted to give the town something in return. He wanted to help the community.

Merchants in any community with this attitude, although they may not be financially able to give money, will give much to the home town that can not be valued in dollars and cents.



EXPERIMENTAL FORESTS

Research Forestry Aids Nation's Woodland Owners Grow Trees

To meet the increasing demand for timber, Uncle Sam's research foresters have come up with ways of producing stronger trees and making them grow faster.

During 1950 the United States consumed approximately 39 billion board feet of lumber. This represents more lumber than the nation used in any one year since 1942, when 60 per cent of the lumber produced went into military channels. Lured by high prices and a continuing heavy demand, too many woodland owners today are selling off timber faster than they are growing it.

The small corps of research foresters working in the forest service of the U. S. department of agriculture have spent long years making studies of the growth, harvesting and utilization of trees. Work has been slow because it takes from 20 to 80 years for a tree to mature. Now the foresters are coming up with some of the answers to the forest owners' problem of how to make money and at the same time guarantee a future supply.

Caring for the forest involves taking out diseased, deformed and lowgrade trees. Research men have developed sprays which will kill insects and prevent the spread of infections. They have experimented with poisons as a means of killing low-grade species. They have produced hybrids that resist certain diseases and that will grow twice as fast as their parents. As another means of getting trees to grow faster, these foresters have tried thinning lightly or heavily at different intervals.

120 Experimental Forests in Country

Trees are a crop to be planted, cared for and harvested, just like any other plant. Some individuals get a lot of fun out of planting a variety of trees as they walk through the woods or as an experiment in their back yards. Commercial planting, however, is not a hit-or-miss proposition.

Studies of trees are carried on through 11 forest and range experiment stations in this country. Actual field work is conducted at 61 research centers and 102 experimental forests.

The Koen experimental forest, for instance, is a part of the central Ozark branch of the forest service. Experiments carried on in this forest will help owners of 20,000,000 acres of woodland in 24 counties of the Ozark highlands manage their forests. Each station finds what practices are best for woodland owners in that particular area.

SPORTSMAN'S HORIZON

By JIM RHODY

Real Needs

There is no fair-minded sportsman, surely, who would question the motives or sincerity of the various state game and fish divisions throughout the country, but in our own particular case we have noticed a growing tendency on the part of such organizations to be forever rushing to state legislatures with the cry: "Give us a law!"

Well, laws are necessary for game and fish conservation, but recourse to law, sometimes, instead of to common sense, may defeat the very thing that is sought. In that connection here are some rules which should govern or come before the laws regulating fishing:

Laws and regulations for fish must be useful; not burdensome.

What one sees with his eyes in a pond, lake or stream is not what actually exists. The lake an angler thought was productive was proved to be the opposite. In like manner, they learned that the poor angling they experienced might not be because of unproductive fish, but fishing at the wrong time of year!

It takes money to do a job. To create more fishing, such as developing new impoundments, costs money. But it is worth it. Budgets which favored law enforcement divisions were adjusted to favor the tiny budgets of fish divisions. Many state administrators lost out to men who saw the needs of management workers.

There are more anglers "born" each day. It is a big job to meet the demands. Old methods have to be modified or tossed out the window. Providing more and better angling does not come from guarding a fish in a stream, but from managing that fish so it can be most productive to the angler.

Angler's Prayer

Dear Lord, when Gabriel blows his blast
And I come home to rest at last,
Don't measure me for harp and wings;
Let me have, instead, these things:
Some tackle, and a rod and reel,
A pair of waders and a creel,
A gushing, frothy glacier stream,
A placid lake by which to dream,
An angel pal with whom to angle,
Magic lines that will not tangle;
And permission, Lord, with fingers crossed,
To lie about the fish I lost!

Balanced Outfits

While this may appear as rankest heresy among many oldtimer anglers, it is now a recognized fact that there is no such thing as a "balanced" fly-casting outfit: that is, perfect balancing of the equipment at the time of purchase.

Many elements enter into the reasons why this is the case. In the first place, experimentation and experience have proved that the old formula, the reel weighing so much more than the rod, is just so much hokum. The purveyors of that idea forgot to take into account the weight ahead of the rod when the caster has out 35 or more feet of line. This weight, as anyone who has experienced it can tell, means a whale of a difference if the rod-user has bought a line too heavy for his rod.

As a rule, this hit-and-miss method of choosing a "balanced" outfit isn't necessary these days as a majority of rod-makers imprint in the rod the sizes of level or tapered lines which should be used on it. However, this doesn't completely take oll the headache out of the outfit-balancing procedure. For instance, not all fly lines are standard and, for another thing, nylon lines are one weight lighter than silk lines of the same letter designation. For instance: A D-level nylon line is only as heavy as an E-Level silk line. And so it goes.

Just the same, the angler knowing the difference in the weights of nylon and silk lines, and who wishes to rely on the rod-maker's direction for the line-size to choose, will get a fairly well-balanced outfit the first time. That is, if he forgets about the weight of the reel and remembers only that its chief function is that of a repository for the line. This is not to say, of course, that a fly-rod man can't overload himself in the matter of heavy, cumbersome fly reels, particularly in the automatic category. But, with commonsense as his guide, and his own "feel" for the fishing instrument in his hand, he ought to be able to put together an outfit that is easy and a pleasure to use and which will, at the same time, enable him to get the most from his fishing.

Did You Know?

That fish are comparatively short-lived?

Most fresh-water fish seldom live more than 10 years, excepting the sturgeon which is believed to mature at 20 or more years of age and may live 100 years or longer.

That the major part of the annual crop of panfish dies without ever being caught by fishermen?

Studies have revealed that less than 10 per cent of the annual crop of panfish was taken by fishing.

"Why are those blinds down, doctor?" he asked.

"Well," said the physician, "there's a fire burning across the alley and I didn't want you to wake up and think the operation had been a failure."

OUTLAW GUNS

BY E. E. HALLERAN

THE STORY SO FAR: The border town of Mesa Verde seething with plots and counter-plots, all hinging on the location of a store of munitions hidden by Derek Bartell. Archie Scott, a government agent who is supposed to meet Dan Frazer, also an agent, and tell him the location of the cache, is fatally shot just as the two are about to get together. Scott whispers two words: "The bullet." Frazer picks up Scott's gun and goes out into the street. In his search for the murderer, Frazer approaches Bartell's store. He sees a man outside aiming a gun through the window. Frazer shoots first and kills the man, Vince Gale, who was attempting to murder Helen Bartell.

CHAPTER VII

"If it happened," the deputy snapped. 'How do we know you ain't makin' up the whole yarn? How do we know it didn't happen the other way around? Maybe you was the bushwhacker and it was Gale who busted in on the game. Maybe you killed him when he caught you at it."

Helen Bartell uttered a little cry of disbelief, but it was smothered by the ominous murmur from the cramped men in the alley. Frazer forced a laugh. "You're letting your imagination run away with you, brother," he scoffed. "Just take a peek at what happened? How many shots were fired?"

"Two," somebody said. "I heard 'em plain."

"Good," Frazer approved. "How far apart did they come?"

Bartell Asks Frazer Inside for a Talk

"Just two shots," he repeated. "And one of them killed this hombre. He was shot through from the left side under the arm. So it wasn't his own bullet that killed him. Which means he . . ."

"Not so fast," Delaplane snapped. "You ain't provin' you didn't fire the other slug too."

"Oh, yes I am. I showed you where my bullet went and witnesses have said that the two shots came right together, too close together to have been fired from the same gun. So I didn't fire the other one. Now take a look at Gale's gun."

He stooped to pick up the six-gun which still lay in the alley. Flicking open the cylinder he held it up to the light of the window. "One shot fired, see? Could that slug have gone anywhere except into the Bartell store?"

Both Emery and Bartell appeared just as the men filed out of the alley with their lifeless burden. Once more the story had to be told, and this time there was light enough for Frazer to watch its effect on the faces of some of the listeners. The most startling expression was that of Derek Bartell. The gleam of fanaticism had been in the man's black eyes when he arrived, but as he heard the story of his daughter's narrow escape the gleam changed to one of fear. Twice he asked to have parts of the yarn repeated, as though he had trouble in accepting the testimony. Finally, however, he seemed convinced of Vince Gale's guilt.

"Thanks, young man," he said briefly. "Won't you come in a few minutes? I'd like to talk to you alone."

When the store was closed, Bartell led the way to comfortable living quarters on the upper floor. The girl had preceded them and was setting out drinks and cigars when the two men arrived. Frazer had been wondering whether her father intended to include her in the proposed talk, and he quickly understood that such was the case. Evidently she expected to be treated as one of the firm. Which brought up another thought. Was Helen Bartell a party to the filibustering plans?

Finally it was the girl who jogged him bluntly. "Come, father," she said, her voice quite firm. "It's fairly evident that you asked Mr. Frazer up here for some purpose. Stop beating around the bush and tell him what's on your mind."

He braced himself visibly and turned directly to Frazer. "Do I understand that you have come to Mesa Verde in search of a job?"

Frazer nodded. "You might call it that," he admitted.

"Good. I'm going to offer you one. Before I do, though, I'll have to swear you to secrecy. Do I have your promise that anything I tell you is to be kept in strict confidence?"

He was working up to a pitch of nervous excitement now and waited for Frazer to reply. Certainly he did not seem to note that his guest's answer was no real promise. All Frazer said was, "Anything that's a private matter with you is safe with me."

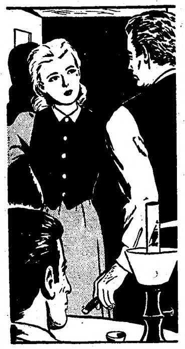
"Then here it is." Bartell seemed relieved that he had taken the plunge. "Any hour now fighting may break out below the border. For years there has been trouble with the organized bandit gangs which infest the territory, and that trouble has been increased by the restless Yaquis. Some of us have forseen this day and have planned against it, preparing for the moment when something will have to be done as a matter of self-protection. Neither the Mexican government nor our own will make any real effort to protect our lives or our property, so we have taken steps to defend ourselves. We are ready."

He managed to get some of the ardor of the patriotic orator into his words, but his enthusiasm lagged quickly as he went on, "The trouble is that other interests have learned of our plans, interests which will hesitate at nothing to turn matters into unscrupulous channels. I feel confident that it is these villians who were responsible for the murders today—and for the attempt on my daughter's life."

Frazer was willing to agree solidly on that point, so he nodded his acceptance of the statement and waited for Bartell to continue.

Frazer Believes Gale Feared Recognition

"We could fight open enemies," the older man said, rather petulantly, "but we can't fight the sort of treachery which I fear is a part of this situation. After what has happened today I am satisfied that some of the men we have trusted are out to betray us. Gale, for example. I trusted him—and he repays me by trying to murder my daughter. Do you know why?"



"It's fairly evident that you asked Mr. Fraser up here for some purpose. Stop beating around the bush."

Frazer nodded. "I think so. He was one of the men who conducted that hold-up and murder this afternoon. He was afraid he had been recognized by your daughter—who had surprised them by being on the stagecoach. He decided to kill her in order to keep from being exposed."

Bartell seemed to gain in confidence as he continued, "So I am hounded by treachery. I must depend on someone I can trust, or the whole cause is lost. I think I can trust you, young man."

"You know nothing about me," he told Bartell. "Maybe I'm not . . ."

"You're as safe as anyone," Bartell interrupted bitterly. "You're a stranger in Mesa Verde, so it's a fair assumption that you're not in the employ of any of these thieving bands who have risen to hamper our purposes. A stranger is a better bet than an acquaintance who has sold out to the enemy."

"All right," Frazer shrugged, avoiding the girl's eyes. "You have my promise that I'll work for your best interests—and the best interests of the country. That's as far as I can go." This time he caught the girl's puzzled glance and wondered whether she understood his cryptic statement about her father's best interests.

Evidently Bartell misunderstood completely, for he nodded with some eagerness. "That's enough for me," he declared. "Now let's get down to cases. How much do you know of the situation here?"

"I've heard a lot of talk," Frazer replied. "It seems there's trouble in the Sierra Madre region. American miners have worked into the area and have found traces of profitable copper. The trouble is that they can't work the mines because they're hampered by the raiding Yaquis and the bandit armies who roam through the mountains.

"So you have planned to take control. You have gathered together a quantity of munitions and are ready to step in when the proper moment comes. Rumor is not clear on that point. I don't know whether a Yaqui insurrection will be the signal for armed intervention or whether another scheme is to be used. At any rate you are planning to seize control of a large part of the province of Sonora."

"That's entirely correct," he said worriedly. "Too correct for comfort. If a stranger in town can learn so much from gossip in a few hours it would appear that someone has been doing entirely too much talking."

"No trouble to learn that much," Frazer told him. "I've even heard more—only this part I don't imagine you'll like very much. The talk is that your crowd is expecting to get the support of a certain Mexican politician who will start a full scale rebellion as soon as you turn over the necessary arms to him. His soldiers and your volunteers will oust the regular Mexican authorities and set up an independent state that will apply for admission into the United States. Isn't that the plan?

"The part you won't like is the talk that your Mexican friend is all set to sell you down the river. Once he gets his paws on the shootin' irons he's ready to give you the old heave-ho and set up in business for himself."

"I don't believe it."

"Then try this one. It's going the rounds along with the other story. There's a second Mexican leader, a sort of bandit generalissimo, who is figuring to rawhide both of you and the other hombre. His game is to steal the guns from you and use them for some special hell-raisin' of his own, probably including a bit of wholesale raiding along the border. Have you planned on how you'll act if either of the southern neighbors do the things they're supposed to be planning?"

Bartell and Frazer Continue Their Talk

There was something like fright in those intense dark eyes of the stout man. "Where did you pick up these fantastic yarns?" he demanded, trying to hide his uneasiness under a show of brisk unbelief.

Frazer shrugged. "A man only has to use his ears. I was curious about that murder this afternoon and it all seemed to tie up. So I listened."

"What? Where does the murder fit into this business?"

Frazer settled himself a little more comfortably in the big chair he had appropriated, aware that Helen Bartell was watching tensely. Apparently the girl was learning something she had not even suspected before. The knowledge pleased him and he selected his words carefully, trying to make a double impression. "The talk is that the government has sent out a man to stop this whole show. Somebody got the government man before he could get to Mesa Verde and find just what was happening here."

For a moment Frazer was afraid Bartell was going to explode. His face grew redder as the fear grew in his eyes. He was beginning to understand the enormity of the thing which had grown out of his planning, but the stubborn streak in him was keeping him from recognizing his own responsibility. He sputtered a couple of times, but whatever he might have said was prevented by a hail from the street below. A fist thundered on the door of the store and a man's deep voice yelled, "Hey, Bartell! Better get down here pronto. There's hell to pay. Shake it up!"

The effect on the storekeeper was startling. He jumped out of his chair and grabbed his hat as he leaped for the stairway. Frazer tried to halt him with a question, but the stout man did not even turn to reply. There was only the clatter of boot heels on the stairs and the sound of a door slamming.

Frazer turned to find the girl's dark eyes upon him, the trouble in them frank and unhidden. "How much of that did you make up?" she asked bluntly.

"None of it," he replied. "I'm afraid I didn't even get around to some of the worst features."

Frazer was halfway down to the rakened store when he heard the quick patter of footsteps behind him. "Wait," Helen Bartell called, a little breathlessly. "You'll stumble down there in the dark. Let me show you."

He obeyed, a trifle impatiently. It was beginning to dawn upon him that he had fumbled a golden opportunity. Instead of pumping Derek Bartell while the man was emotionally upset he had outsmarted himself, doing all the talking and learning practically nothing in return. Now there had been a break of some sort. It might mean that Bartell would be more careful in the future and would refuse to talk.

"Do you think my father is in danger?" she asked.

"No more than you," he retorted dryly. "He's dealing with some pretty slippery crooks, but there has been no indication that anyone plans to kill him. Which is more than I can say in your case."

EVERY SEASON MUST HAVE ITS FISH YARN

Dan Wier of Hibbing rather disgustedly let a pint-size northern dangle in an Ely lake, but got busy when his rod bent nearly double, hauling in an eight-pounded with the little fellow in his mouth. . . . Messrs. Stankey and Mueller of Janesville came back from a long sit with only one small perch, but Mmes. Mueller and Stankey proceeded to practically surfeit them with nice fresh fish. The ladies had captured a big northern busily feeding on shallow-water minnows near their camp. . . .Billy Sletvold, 10, learned about "a pretty kettle of fish" when he retrieved a teakettle from the bottom of Lost River near Oklee: inside was a 17-inch northern pike.

ROSES ARE RED, PEONIES PINK

Faribault—Four famous producers of four favorite flowers have earned for this city an international reputation. Oliver F. Brand seems to have started this development when he founded a nursery in 1870 and began specializing in peonies; now his son Archie M. Brand is carrying on, on the same farm where he was born and on which he and his staff now grow more more than 500 varieties of peonies in 20 different colors, many of them originated by Brand; he is a past president of American Peony Association and an internationally recognized authority. Andrews Nursery has achieved fame for its roses, Farmers Seed& Nursery Co. for gladiolas, Lehman Gardens for chrysanthemums.

Keep Alert But Avoid Panic Vets Advice On Rabies

Rabies have been reported this year among Minnesota's abnormally large skunk population. However, the situation does not justify wide-scale, state-wide vaccination or premature destruction of valuable domestic animals, according to Dr. D. L. West, Minnesota state veterinarian, and Dr. W. L. Boyd, veterinary division chief at the University Farm.

They suggest confinement of dogs at night, especially in areas where skunks are numerous or in cases where there have been recent reports of rabies cases.

If a dog or other farm animal is suspected of having rabies or of having been attacked by a rabid animal, it should be confined and a veterinarian called.

If a wild animal is noticed to be acting peculiarly, confine it if possible and call a veterinarian. It is better to destroy it, however, than to let it get away if there is any probability that it has rabies.

Dead animals suspected with good reason of having been rabid should be submitted to laboratory test. Local veterinarians or county agents can furnish information on procedures for this test.

Vaccination against rabies is quite reliable and it is recommended by veterinarians especially in cases where domestic animals are known or strongly suspected of being exposed to skunks or other animals which might be rabid.

However, whether or not to vaccinate is a question to be decided by local conditions and the advice of the local veterinarian, Dr. West and Dr. Boyd pointed out.

A mail carrier at Bemidji, park commissioner in Minneapolis, fireman at Tracy, and Austin school custodian, all retire after 30 or 31 years of service, but the real longevity records begin with Harry Paddock who at 81 retires after 37 years on Walker school board, during which time he walked two miles from his home to town for every meeting but two. . . L. F. Hoffman, 70, hangs up his pouch after carrying Faribault mail 38 years. . . August Bischoff, Melrose, retires after 39 years on the Great Northern. . . H. L. Hollister, 81, has been 40 years secretary of the Minnesota Benefit Association at the St. Paul capitol.

EVERY SEASON MUST HAVE ITS FISH YARN

Dan Wier of Hibbing rather disgustedly let a pint-size northern dangle in an Ely lake, but got busy when his rod bent nearly double, hauling in an eight-pounded with the little fellow in his mouth. . . . Messrs. Stankey and Mueller of Janesville came back from a long sit with only one small perch, but Mmes. Mueller and Stankey proceeded to practically surfeit them with nice fresh fish. The ladies had captured a big northern busily feeding on shallow-water minnows near their camp. . . .Billy Sletvold, 10, learned about "a pretty kettle of fish" when he retrieved a teakettle from the bottom of Lost River near Oklee: inside was a 17-inch northern pike.

THE FAMILY GOES TO SCHOOL

James, John, and Paul O'Leary Waverly brothers, graduate in June: one from high school, one from law school, the third from medical school. . . . Three Sampson brothers of Hector, graduate in June: one from high school, one from teachers college, one from an Illinois college of foot surgery. . . . Twelve years without absence or tardiness is the public school record just established by Darrell Wobbrock, Faribault high school. Graduation took on special significance when Rufus Putnam, Minneapolis school superintendent, delivered the commencement address at one of his own schools, Washburn high, where his own daughter Colleen was a member of the graduating class.

ROSES ARE RED, PEONIES PINK

Faribault—Four famous producers of four favorite flowers have earned for this city an international reputation. Oliver F. Brand seems to have started this development when he founded a nursery in 1870 and began specializing in peonies; now his son Archie M. Brand is carrying on, on the same farm where he was born and on which he and his staff now grow more more than 500 varieties of peonies in 20 different colors, many of them originated by Brand; he is a past president of American Peony Association and an internationally recognized authority. Andrews Nursery has achieved fame for its roses, Farmers Seed& Nursery Co. for gladiolas, Lehman Gardens for chrysanthemums.

MOTHER NATURE USES GREEN THUMB

A mushroom 18½ inches in diameter was found by Mrs. Al Kunz, New Ulm. . . Mrs. G. J. Burk exhibits a super-lucky 6-leaf clover at Fairmont. . . A fragrant 18-inch bloom adorns Mrs. August Jantz's nine-foot drasena, West St. Paul, for the second time in 14 years. . . . Minneapolis firemen in routine checks have found several roof-top trees.

THIS AND THAT HERE AND THERE

William Singewald waited five years for his night blooming cereus to flower then missed it because he had to be at his night post in th St. Paul Pioneer-Press plant. . . Excavators for a new home at Warren found the end of the rainbow: 68 silver dollars from a buried hoard rolled about the diggin's. . . Jack Earl made one of the longest stays in the shortest time on record at Rochester Clinic: he is 8-feet 6½ inches tall, is a wine salesman, and stayed two days.

AGE NEED BE NO HANDICAP

A. G. Erickson, Springfield Advance-Press, boosted his bowling average from 155 to 162 while advancing from a boyish 69 to a sprightly 70. . . Julius Sibilrud at 96 is top contestant for Freeborn county's oldest citizen. . . Oldest guest at the 61st wedding anniversary celebration of Mr. and Mrs. August D. Drenskhahn, Minneiska, was the groom's neighboring brother John Drenckhahn, 103. . . James Morrill was but a youngster when he subscribed for the Janesville Argus in 1885, and he's still reading it regularly 66 years later. . . At the lower end of the scale is John P. Stopka, former service man, mayor of Columbia Heights, believed to be the state's youngest at 22.

Keep Alert But Avoid Panic Vets Advice On Rabies

Rabies have been reported this year among Minnesota's abnormally large skunk population. However, the situation does not justify wide-scale, state-wide vaccination or premature destruction of valuable domestic animals, according to Dr. D. L. West, Minnesota state veterinarian, and Dr. W. L. Boyd, veterinary division chief at the University Farm.

They suggest confinement of dogs at night, especially in areas where skunks are numerous or in cases where there have been recent reports of rabies cases.

If a dog or other farm animal is suspected of having rabies or of having been attacked by a rabid animal, it should be confined and a veterinarian called.

If a wild animal is noticed to be acting peculiarly, confine it if possible and call a veterinarian. It is better to destroy it, however, than to let it get away if there is any probability that it has rabies.

Dead animals suspected with good reason of having been rabid should be submitted to laboratory test. Local veterinarians or county agents can furnish information on procedures for this test.

Vaccination against rabies is quite reliable and it is recommended by veterinarians especially in cases where domestic animals are known or strongly suspected of being exposed to skunks or other animals which might be rabid.

However, whether or not to vaccinate is a question to be decided by local conditions and the advice of the local veterinarian, Dr. West and Dr. Boyd pointed out.

A mail carrier at Bemidji, park commissioner in Minneapolis, fireman at Tracy, and Austin school custodian, all retire after 30 or 31 years of service, but the real longevity records begin with Harry Paddock who at 81 retires after 37 years on Walker school board, during which time he walked two miles from his home to town for every meeting but two. . . L. F. Hoffman, 70, hangs up his pouch after carrying Faribault mail 38 years. . . August Bischoff, Melrose, retires after 39 years on the Great Northern. . . H. L. Hollister, 81, has been 40 years secretary of the Minnesota Benefit Association at the St. Paul capitol.

Main Street Reaps Big Profits From Millions of U.S. Tourists

If Main Street happens to be on a national highway it will mean big business for the home town during the remainder of July and August. Millions of Americans will take to the highways to see the country. And they will spend millions in the home towns for lodging, gasoline, oil, food, soft drinks, souvenirs, and gadgets.

The home town that has a national park or historic shrine nearby, or is located in a beautiful scenic area, will reap the biggest dividend during the weeks that Americans live on wheels. But this opportunity to further home town economy is often neglected by merchants, civic clubs, and the publishers of local newspapers because they fail to tell the world about their assets. It's not too late for many home towns to do something about it.

The home towner who plans to take off on a trip across the country is urged to give careful consideration to the widespread deterioration that has taken place along some of the country's main highways. It is wise to study routes before departure to avoid delays and inconveniences.

Over-all postwar highway construction has not been able to keep pace with the ever-increasing volume of motor traffic. In addition, one of the heaviest snowfalls in the history of the country covered many northern states last winter and resulted in widespread damage to road surfaces. Home towns located on highways in good repair will find traffic through town greatly increased during the next two or three months.

Motoring in the United States has come a long way since 1922 when a national magazine declared "anybody can drive across the country now in fifty days." However, the magazine warned that "anyone undertaking to drive from the Atlantic to the Pacific in thirty days has thrown the scenery of the journey away for the questionable privilege of watching chucks and rucks."

Today the motorist thinks nothing of allowing three or four days for a 1,500 mile journey, and maybe seven or eight for a coast to coast trip.

But due to the weather during the past winter and deterioration during the war years, this schedule should be revised slightly upward this year. Most states have labored to improve their road networks, but the motorist must expect to find many inadequate stretches of highways.

For the home towner who has not yet decided where he will spend his vacation this year, here are a few figures on costs and events in the south, east and west.

Florida, nationally known as the winter playground of the nation, is making a big bid for summer vacationers this year. Many cities and towns, in cooperation with hotel and apartment house associations and merchants, are offering special vacation package deals for as little as $3.30 a day per person.

In many towns apartments are available for as little as $40 a week. Hotels are offering rooms at $5 and $6 a day that rent in winter for $22. Efficiency apartments, renting in the winter season for $110 a week, drop to $25 for the summer months. The average cost for motels will be about $2 a person during the summer months.

Motorists in the west will find prices very favorable when compared with the nation as a whole. One of the big attractions in the west as vacationers start rolling down national highways are rodeos. Here are a few dates and places of rodeos in the next few weeks:

63 Million to Take Motor Vacations

According to the American Automobile Association some 63,000,000 persons will take recreation motor trips before the year ends, despite highway shortcomings caused by heavy snows and freezing during the past winter.

This prediction is made after government sources indicate there will be no shortage of spare parts and gasoline, and that tires will be available in nearly every part of the country.

The A.A.A. reports that prices in motor courts across the country have not increased in proportion to other items and that motorists will find comfortable, clean housing within the average family's vacation budget.

National parks, visited by 32,000,000 people last year, are expecting more than 35,000,000 tourists this season. Of the total, 94 per cent will arrive in private automobiles, the A.A.A. reported.

Korean Conflict Is One Year Old; World War May Have Been Averted

SOON, IF AT ALL—A few days ago—June 25—the Korean war was one year old. Today, after a year of fighting Communism in battle, the questions uppermost in the minds of most Americans is what are the chances for world peace? Is World War III nearer or more remote?

A great many unknown factors and "ifs" arise with such questions. But there is a growing belief in the world today that a general war is more remote than a year ago. This reasoning is based mainly upon two points: (1) The free nations of the world are growing stronger every day; (2) the free world has demonstrated in deeds as well as words it will resist aggression.

There is one fact that none of the free nations of the world is overlooking. There is the possibility, in the face of the west's growing strength, that the Soviet Union realizes it must act soon, if at all. To wait would only give the west time to grow so strong that victory for Communism would be an impossibility.

The Korean war seems to have accomplished several things. It brought to life the west's lagging plans to marshal military, political and economic resources to meet future aggression. And these moves may have served as a deterrent to ambitious aggressors.

TEXAS TOUR—Gen. Douglas MacArthur flew to Texas for a number of official receptions and speeches. For three days he preached his doctrine of a realistic approach to far east problems. He went so far in a Dallas speech as to say "it is fantastically unrealistic to refuse to accept the fact that we are at war—a bitter, savage and costly war."

But the colorful general who has caused more controversy in a few months than many prominent figures do in a lifetime, departed from his main theme to take a slap at the domestic policies of the Truman administration.

"There are those who seek to make the burden of taxation so great and the progressive increases so alarming that the spirit of adventure, tireless energy, and masterful initiative which built the material strength of the nation shall become stultified and inert," he said. "There are those who seek to make all men servants of the state."

The departure from the main theme of his speeches since he returned to the United States increased speculation that the general may be planning a political career despite his assertion he is not interested in entering politics. The Texas visit has been called a test for future political moves.

GRAIN FOR INDIA—The long delayed grain for India bill, lending India $190,000,000 on easy terms to buy 2,000,000 tons of U. S. wheat and other basic foodstuffs, was signed into law by President Truman.

The bill was subject to months of heavy debate in congress before it was finally passed. Critics argued that India's opposition to some U. S. policies in Korea made her an ill deserving beneficiary. Backers said it had a humanitarin purpose and, besides, it would help line up India with the western world as opposed to the Communist bloc.

In the months of debate many forgot the fact that the food purchased by the loan will prevent famine in India. It was the only humane thing this nation could do.

PRICE CONTROLS—By the time this reaches print the defense production act which gives the government the power to control prices, wages and rents may or may not have been extended. In all probability it will have, but it will not contain the broader powers as asked by President Truman.

Special interests—the cattle industry, landlords, the building industry and others—have used every trick at their command to get amendments tacked to the act that would be to their advantage.

As a result, the house banking committee voted tentatively to knock out two future price rollbacks on live cattle planned by the office of price stabilization. Also, the senate banking committee voted to renew and expand the government's rent-control program. But the senate committee at the same time recommended a raise in some of the rent ceilings.

The committee felt that a 20 per cent increase should be allowed in some areas. Many of these areas already had from 10 to 30 per cent increases above 1942 levels.

As for the house vote on beef rollbacks, it was a direct slap at the administration's beef policies. The vote was in the form of an amendment that would limit future price rollbacks on all agricultural commodities to 90 per cent of prices on May 19, 1951.

Whatever its form, the new defense production act will be far from what President Truman asked.

MACARTHUR HEARINGS—Any day now the MacArthur hearings will close. It would be interesting to know what historians will make of the incident and read into the millions of words of testimony.

No hearig or debate in American history ever caused so much comment in the big towns and the home towns of the nation. And possibly no incident in modern history, excepting World War II and the Korean war, received such coverage in the nation's press. It made good reading in dailies and small town newspaprs alike.

The debate may have been good for the nation, and certainly, was carried out in the best American tradition of free speech and thought. But there was one regretable aspect of the hearing. Our potential enemies now know the inner thoughts and reasoning of American foreign policy. Our policies are an open book to the entire world.

RESERVISTS TO GO HOME—Home town enlisted reservists — not members of organized reserve or national guard units—are going to be released by the army. Approximately 100,000 will be released in the next six months.

There will be no "point system" or other inflexible standards to determine the order in which the reservists are released. Each unit will set up its own standards, giving "primary consideration" to maintaining maximum effectiveness.

But veterans who served 90 days or more during World War II are to be let out first under the general standards set up by the army. Reservists who have had previous military service other than World War II are to get second priority.

AMERICAN DOCUMENTS

Constitution to be Preserved in Glass

America's most precious documents—the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution—will be preserved permanently in glass, it was announced recently in Washington.

Work on finding a suitable way of preserving the parchments began a decade ago, but was interrupted by World War II. Since the revival of the project, officials of the Library of Congress, scientists of the National Bureau of Standards and Thermonpane technicians of Libbey-Owen-Ford glass company have spent nearly four years perfecting special bronze and glass enclosures for the job.

When the two historical symbols of democracy are once safely stored in glass they will be available for inspection by the public.

HOUSEHOLD QUESTIONS

By ROGER C. WHITMAN

Water Drips Through Ceiling

QUESTION: We plan to remodel our kitchen and have a problem to contend with. The home we purchased a year ago is a two-family house. We want to remodel our kitchen on the main floor because the plaster on the ceiling is in bad condition. We now have a nine-foot ceiling and wish to lower it to eight feet. Is there some kind of waterproofing to use so that the water won't run through our ceiling when we put on the new plaster?

ANSWER: The real answer to the problem is to cover the floor of the upstairs kitchen with a good magnesite composition floor with a cove base of the same material. It should be properly laid by an experienced floor contractor. The water that runs through the floor not only ruins your ceiling but may also rot the sub-floor or joists. As the house belongs to you, there should be no difficulty in having the work done.

BY E. E. HALLERAN

THE STORY SO FAR: Dan Frazer, government agent in the border town of Mesa Verde to clear up the mystery behind an illegal munitions cache, kills a man, Vince Gale, who was attempting to murder Helen Bartell by firing at her through the window of her father's store. Derek Bartell thanks Frazer for saving his daughter's life and asks him in for a talk. He tells Frazer that he wants to maintain peace and freedom from bandit depredations around the copper mines. Frazer accuses him of storing munitions in preparation for seizing a part of the province of Sonora and tells him further that he is being double-crossed by a member of his own group.

CHAPTER VIII

He pulled up abruptly as his ear caught the sound of voices in the street. "Better wait," he cautioned. "I think your father is just out front. It might not be smart for me to burst out there and interrupt."

"I don't understand you," she complained half humorously. "I'm sure you're not what you pretend, but I can't see where you stand in this business. Tonight I expected you to try to get information; instead you gave it."

"You're too suspicious," he scoffed, trying to keep from committing himself.

They were walking slowly and cautiously toward the door now and Frazer murmured a whispered assent, his ear turned toward the sound of those voices outside. "It's dangerous, no doubt, and the worst feature is the utter impossibility of telling who is who. A man who seemed to be one of your father's assistants tried to kill you. He did so because he was afraid you would implicate him in another murder which I feel sure your father knew nothing about. Maybe it would help us to understand things if we knew who was so fearful of having a Federal man reach Mesa Verde."

They stopped at the door as he looked out, quickly spotting the four dark figures who were out there in close conversation. One was Derek Bartell and two others were easily distinguished by their unique figures. The big blond man and the wiry little Mexican. It was some time before Frazer recognized the fourth one as the hotelkeeper, Ben Chew.

Blond Man, Mexican Are Seen With Bartell

"Help me out of this one," he whispered to the girl, forcing himself to keep his head as her closeness threatened to drive his mind into other and pleasanter channels. "Who is that big yellow-haired fellow out there?"

She peered out intently for some moments. Then her whispered reply carried a note of trouble. "I don't know the man. He was in here earlier this evening. He and father talked for several minutes and then they went out together."

"You don't know what they talked about?"

"No."

"Has it occurred to you that your father's departure cleared the field for Gale to make his attempt on your life?"

"What? You mean this man served as a decoy to get my father away from the store?"

"It's an idea. I'm just wondering."

"Now what?" Miss Bartell asked expectantly.

"Now I go out and look things over," he replied promptly. "You go back upstairs and keep the gun handy."

"But why do you concern yourself?" she asked, her voice still low. "There's no reason why you should take the risks which are so apparent here. It's nothing to you."

He restrained his desire to laugh aloud. There was no doubt in his mind now but what the unfortunate Duke had been killed by someone whose instructions had been to kill Dan Frazer. Archie Scott had been cut down by the same orders—and for approximately the same reason. Any moment now the outlaw gang might discover the mistake of the afternoon and set out to repair their oversight. Helen Bartell did not need to worry about Frazer involving himself in needless dangers. He was already in it up to his neck.

"I'm about set to take up a proposition which your father almost offered tonight," he told her quietly, "That puts me in it."

"But you're taking an unnecessary risk."

"When I consider the company it places me in," he told her swiftly, "it's a pleasure."

Footsteps sounded in the street. He paused, and they watched together as the stumbling figure of a man lurched into view. The fellow was obviously very drunk and behind him a tall, angular man stalked him cautiously. Frazer reached for the door latch just as the tall man grabbed the inebriate and hurled him bodily into the alcove made by the store entrance.

There was a brief flurry of action and a couple of dull thumps as Frazer stepped through the doorway and took a hand in the party. He was not in time to save the drunken man a crack on the head, but he did take quick revenge on the attacker. The tall man went down before a straight right to the chin, his amazed grunt showing more surprise than anger.

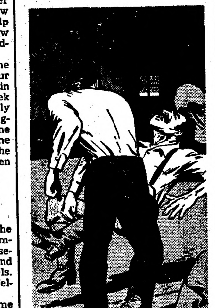
"Every drunk has a crook to roll him," Frazer remarked disgustedly. "Stand up and let me poke you again."

The lanky one was too sly for that. He remained prone for just an instant, then rolled swiftly, digging for his gun as he swore at Frazer. There was a cry of alarm from Helen Bartell, and then Frazer was in action again. This time he used his feet—as effectively as he had used his fist. He jumped over the fallen inebriate, sidestepped once and then kicked hard.

The lanky man rolled swiftly again, this time coming to his feet and sprinting away into the darkness. Frazer took another stride and picked up the gun which he had kicked out of the man's grasp. He even chuckled a little as he went back into the doorway. "Looks like I oughta hire out to the town marshal," he remarked casually. "I hear the marshal wants to keep folks from totin' guns—and it looks like I'm doin' all I can to help his program. This makes three I've picked up tonight."

Victim Seen to Be Little Prospector

"You can drop that fancy drawl," Miss Bartell said, a little sharply. "Help me get this poor fellow into the store. I'm afraid he's hurt."



The tall man went down before a straight right to the chin, his amazed grunt showing more surprise than anger.

"Just drunk," Frazer assured her. "Only thing is he'll have two reasons for a headache tomorrow morning. We'll take care of him, but we don't light any lamps. You're not going to be a target again tonight if I can help it."

"Then we'll take him upstairs. I'm sure he's injured."

Frazer realized then that he had seen the man before. It was the leathery little prospector who had been talking to the blond man and the Mexican in the saloon. Apparently the pair had been eminently successful in their attempt to get the old fellow drunk. But to what purpose? It did not seem likely that they had simply been playing the old game of working on a rich prospector. For one thing, this man did not seem to be overburdened with cash. For another thing, it seemed entirely too evident that they were playing a deeper game—and for bigger stakes.

Then Helen Bartell arrived with a basin of water and a towel. She moved in promptly to bathe the old man's face with a corner of the towel and his eyes opened, their gray depths showing perplexity but a kind of humor. Evidently the blow on the head had knocked some of the stupor out of him, for he managed a cocky little grin as he looked at the girl. "Seems like I musta got myself killed," he observed. "Sorta surprises me, though, that I turned up with the angels."

"You better lie quiet," she warned him. "That was a nasty blow you stopped."

"Yeah. What fell on me? I thought I was just doin' some plain and fancy drinkin'."

"You were drinking with a big blond man and a little dark one when I saw you," Frazer told him, ignoring the girl's glance of reproval. "Then you turned up in the street with a tall galoot trailing you. I reckon he tried to roll you for your poke."

"That was dumb of him. I'm busted." He seemed to be thinking it over, trying to collect the muddled thoughts in his aching head. "Them other fellers was funny, though. I wonder what they wanted?"

That was exactly the question that was in Frazer's mind. "I heard them say something about a canyon to the northwest of town," he prompted.

"Yeah. That's where I been sashayin' around, lookin' fer color. They seemed 'plumb curious about the country. Wanted to know who I saw up there and a lot of funny stuff like that."

"Queer sort of curiosity," Frazer agreed. "Did you have anything to report that seemed to interest them?"

The little man shut his eyes wearily, his scornful laugh almost a groan as his miseries began to catch up with him. "Nothin' to tell. I ain't seen a soul in nigh onto a month."

Frazer changed the subject abruptly. "Now what about the jasper who slugged you? Was he with the other two?"

The prospector seemed to be having trouble in keeping his mind on the questions. "I dunno. Don't recollect anybody else. Seems like I wasn't with anybody fer quite a spell before I hit the street."

"No tall, lanky man?"

"Uh-uh. Nobody."

Frazer caught the girl's eye and they crossed to a far corner, leaving the little man to drop off into a heavy sleep.

"What does it all mean?" Miss Bartell asked, troubled as well as curious. "Was he talking to the same men we just saw outside with my father?"

Problem Is to Find Hidden Arms Cache

"The same. What it means, though, is anybody's guess."

"Don't evade. You've got a pretty good idea, I'll wager."

He grinned a little at her tone of certainty. "All right. My guess is that they're trying to locate those munitions which have been mentioned so prominently."

"Why?"

"Isn't it obvious? The location of the arms and ammunition seems to be the only part of your father's plan that has been kept a secret. I don't believe he has confided in any of the men who seem to be working with him here in town."

"Then you think it indicates treachery?"

"I sure do. Real allies wouldn't be so anxious to pry. It's the tip-off on the blond hombre. He's trying to get some information that he can use in whatever treacherous plan he has in mind. That fits with the theory that he was involved in the hold-up, you know."

"I suppose so—but what could they hope to learn from this poor old desert rat?"

Frazer shrugged. "It's a pretty big country around here, remember. They're trying to narrow down the field of search, and they were hoping the old fellow might have seen something that would indicate traffic or guards somewhere. Unless I miss my guess they'll be convinced now that the guns are not hidden in any of the canyons to the northwest."

Mesa Verde had quieted down appreciable when Frazer moved out into the street. Apparently the hunt for Scott's killer had died down for lack of a quarry. A few were straggling back toward bars, their subdued talk eloquent of frustration, but most of the volunteer searchers had already disappeared from view. Still there was a marked air of tension in the town; an ominous sort of restlessness which seemed to advertise the general feeling that the evening's murder was likely to be a forerunner of more tragedy.

A moment in the dark permitted him to see Derek Bartell as the stout man hurried along toward home on the opposite side of the street. Frazer was tempted to hail him, but he decided that it would be better to let Helen talk to him first.

He waited until Bartell had disappeared into his own store, then he sauntered on down the street, forcing himself into his assumed attitude of easy unconcern. A light in the marshal's office indicated that Carson Emery was at his desk, so Frazer crossed to the door, sticking his head in long enough to ask, "Did you get caught up with that ornery cuss what killed the feller, marshal?"

A dozen men were in the bar of the hotel when Frazer stepped in, the loudest of the lot being Ed Delaplane. The handsome young deputy was showing the effects of too much liquor, his voice rising in a querulous complaint which seemed to be little more than a childish bid for attention. He was enjoying himself in spite of his rueful tone, making himself the butt of his own joke in order to hold the limelight.

". . . So I waltzed along home with her, cocky as you please, and I was all set to get cozy when what d'ye think? She flung me out. Why? Because she smelled perfume on me."

He laughed uproariously and added, "I plumb forgot I'd been foolin' around with Sal just before the stage arrived."

What's The Odds?

"What are the chances of my recovering?" asked the bed-ridden man.

"One hundred per cent," the physician reassured him. "Medical records show that nine out of every ten die of the disease you have. Yours is the tenth case I've treated. Others all died. Statistics are statistics. You're bound to get well."

MINISTER'S WIFE TELLS HOW HADACOL WAS SO HELPFUL
HADACOL Helps Folks With Weak, Run-Down Conditions, Poor Appetite, When Caused by Deficiencies of Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron
A weak, run-down condition can make life mighty drab for folks who feel that way. Imagine not having a good appetite. Loss of weight and energy ofttimes accompany this condition. When Mrs. Ardena Longaker, a minister's wife, who lives at Rt. 5, Meadowbrook Rd., North Kansas City, Mo., began feeling that way she began taking HADACOL for she had heard how it was helping people with weak, run-down conditions and poor appetite, when due to a deficiency of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron. Now, Mrs. Longaker says she feels good and is recommending HADACOL to her friends.
Here is what she says:
"I am a minister's wife and am 39 years old. I was run-down, lost weight, was listless, and had no appetite at all. I'm on my fifth bottle now and am amazed at the results. I want to eat all the time now. Most of all, I'm glad to say, I've gained several pounds. HADACOL is so economical, I believe almost anyone can afford it, and I do recommend it to my friends."
HADACOL makes it possible to actually relieve the REAL CAUSE of weak, run-down conditions, stomach distress, nervousness, poor appetite and nagging aches and pains when due to the lack of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron in the system.
AND LISTEN TO THIS! Continued use of this great HADACOL not only gives continuous complete relief but helps keep such painful distress from returning when caused by such deficiencies. Now that's the kind of product you have been waiting for. That's the kind you should buy and start taking at once.
And HADACOL'S wonderful Vitamins and Minerals come in special pleasant liquid form so they are quickly absorbed and assimilated in the blood, ready to go to work at once.
HADACOL IS SO EFFECTIVE
Because HADACOL helps build up the hemoglobin content of your blood (when Iron is needed) to carry these precious Vitamins and Minerals to every organ and to every part of your body.
You may have tried other Vitamin preparations or other Vitamin and Mineral preparations, so we make you this offer. Try a bottle of HADACOL today. You be the judge. If you do not believe that HADACOL is the best Vitamin and Mineral preparation you have ever taken, we will gladly send you back your money. That's our positive money-back guarantee.
So be fair to yourself. Don't go through life suffering from these conditions when caused by lack of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron, when relief may be as close at hand as your nearest drugstore.
REFUSE SUBSTITUTES
There's only one HADACOL. Don't let anyone tell you something else is "just as good." Insist on genuine HADACOL. You risk nothing because HADACOL is sold on a strict money-back guarantee.
Sold at all drugstores. Trial size, $1.25, but buy the large family size, only $3.50.
If your dealer does not sell HADACOL, order direct from The LeBlanc Corporation, Lafayette, La.

Royal, Yet Democratic

The houses of parliament are best known as the spot where popular will broke the power of Britain's kings. Actually they occupy a royal residence that was on the site from before the Norman conquest to the time of Henry VIII. Although parliament moved in after the Tudor kings, the building still has royal privileges exempting it from certain civic regulations.

House Flies and DDT

There now is definite evidence that house flies are developing resistance to DDT in many parts of this country and elsewhere in the world.

Marionette Shows

Properly staged, a marionette show creates an amazing illusion of size in the minds of the audience. Instead of seeming their actual height, the marionettes appear to be of almost human size, an effect which is greatly increased because the scenery is also made to correspond.

Dublin and Cork

Dublin's half million people live on Eire's east coast, a 70-mile ferry ride separating them from the British rail terminus at Holyhead, Wales. Cork, the second city, near the island's southern tip, counts 75,000 inhabitants.

Minnesota Farmers Get Four-to-One Return on Crops by Increasing Use of Fertilizer

M

FERTILIZER use on Minnesota farms totaled 217,083 tons in 1950, according to a statement by the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee, based on statistics compiled by the National Fertilizer Association.

Corn Belt farmers have increased their fertilizer use by 4,170,920 tons in the past decade, the figures show. Ten Midwestern states used 5,215,392 tons of plant food last year, compared with 1,044,472 tons in 1939. Minnesota's 1950 fertilizer consumption was nearly 16 times greater than in 1939, when only 13,455 tons were used by farmers of the state in growing their crops.

For the entire United States, 1950 fertilizer consumption was 18,346,132 tons, an increase of 1.9 million tons over 1949. The 1950 total was 10,530,054 tons greater than in 1939 and 16,146,132 tons above the 1900 level.

One-fourth of all crop production is now attributable to the use of fertilizer, according to the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Since the value of all crops produced in 1950 was $12.3 billion, U. S. farmers received $3 billion additional income from the $744 million they invested in fertilizer last year. Each dollar spent for plant food in 1950 returned $4.13 in additional income from crops.

Statistics show that the tremendous increases in crop yields in the past 50 years have corresponded to the steadily growing use of fertilizer. Half a century ago, one farm worker, using little fertilizer produced food enough for himself and 5 other persons. Last year, his grandson, using 7 times as much fertilizer, supplied the crops needed for his own use and 14 additional persons.

By . . . Reddy Kilowatt

I stopped in down at Milbank last week and renewed acquaintance with a couple old friends of mine—Charlie Burges who runs the "Milbank Herald-Advance," and W. S. Dolan, who publishes the "Grant County Review." Good editors, both of them, and mighty fine people to talk to.

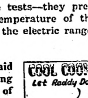
DRIVE SAFELY

Anyway, we got to discussin' about how many bad automobile accidents there are on the highways these days. We agreed it was a shame that folks risk their own lives, and those of their kiddies, every time they go for a little Sunday ride. We also agreed there's only one thing to do about it—be MORE careful than ever before . . . Drive slower . . . Always pretend the OTHER driver is completely blind.

You know, Milbank is a pretty city and I always enjoy mixing with its friendly citizens. So after I left Charlie and Bill, I went over to the Otter Tail office to see Miss Ruth Buri, the cashier. And the first thing she says to me, bless her, is: "When are you going to write something in that column of yours about electric cooking?"

I always get a little flustered when I talk to Ruth, anyway, so the best I could do was stammer, "Why-uh . . . er . . . umph . . . right now, I guess—I mean, next month . . ." Even a kilowatt can't always answer a woman!

"I'll give you a few pointers," says Ruth. "In the first place, you ought to stress how much COOLER cooking with electricity is, especially during the hot months of July and August. I just saw the other day where General Electric made some tests—they prepared 21 test meals in a closed kitchen, and the temperature of the air remained from 8 to 16 degrees COOLER when the electric range was used than with the bottled-gas range."



"Um . . . mighty interesting," I said. "Yes," said Ruth, "and that's only part of the story. During the same test, electricity boiled one quart of water 22 per cent FASTER than gas. And the speed with which you boil water is an accurate measure of the speed of cooking."

"Um . . . electric cooking is cooler and faster," I commented, "what else?" (I could see she couldn't be stopped anyway). "Cooking with electricity is CLEANER, too," said Ruth, "it's SAFER because there's no fire hazard—and, best of all, Reddy, it's more THRIFTY than gas!"

Well, after talking to Ruth I was already to go out and buy me a new electric range . . . until I remembered I'm already "cooking" on 27,233 of them in the Otter Tail territory!

Some Oklahoma History

Earliest known inhabitant of America—the Folsom man—lived in the Oklahoma Panhandle between 10,000 and 12,000 years ago; the first mining expedition in Oklahoma was led by the Spanish explorer, Don Diego del Castillo, in 1650; the first book published in Oklahoma was a school primer in the Creek language, printed at Union Mission in 1835, notes the World Book-Encyclopedia.

"Busy Little Aunt"

Everyone is familiar with the little black "Argentine ant". It swarms into homes, getting into food and in the garden it destroys flowers. On the farm it is injurious to citrus and other fruits and to shade trees, attacking the blossoms and by distributing, establishing and protecting mealy bugs, aphids and scale insects. These insects are widely known for their social organizations.

Vitamin A

DISCOLORATION OF CROPS EXPLAINED BY SPECIALIST

A large number of grain fields in the county have a varying amount of reddish brown discoloration taking place in the crop. In checking this condition with the soils division at University Farm, Mr. Joens, extension specialist in soils says this condition is one that is brot about as soil moisture evaporation takes place certain elements have a tendency to collect in the very top film of soil. Some of these elements are toxic to the plants or grain growing there and the browning of the sheath and leaves takes place.

This condition is rather prevalent over the county. When rainfall occurs this material is dissolved and soaks down into the soil and its effect is not so noticeable in the crop.

Come and Get It

Six miles from Boise, Ida., off U. S. highway 30 on the Boise river was a little dell that rapscallions favored in the 60's as a holdup spot. An eastbound stagecoach from Boise was stopped by a lone highwayman here, and, as the bandit struggled to make off with the heavy strongbox and its $50,000 in gold, a sharp-eyed passenger nailed him with a pistol shot. The wounded bandit hit for the brush, lugging the loot, and disappeared. The next day, however, he was found dead by a posse—but he had buried the gold somewhere nearby. It has never been found to this day.

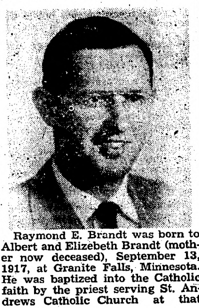
R. Brandt Ordained Sunday

Ordination services were held here Sunday at 3:00 p. m. at which pastor elect Raymond Brandt was ordained into the ministry. Rev. Tolo, vice president of the Northern Minnesota District, conducted the service The Silver Creek and Silverton congregations joined with Nazareth in this service.

Taking part in the ordination service also were the Rev. G. S. Thompson of Thief River Falls, the Rev. C. T. Thompson of Viking, the Rev. N. R. Wigtil of Mavie and the Rev. M. D. Larson of Ada. To the Ordination address and charge by the Rev. G. Walther Tolo, Candidate Brandt gave a very inspiring response. A solo was sung by Marvin Sandberg.



Raymond E. Brandt was born to Albert and Elizebeth Brandt (mother now deceased), September 13, 1917, at Granite Falls, Minnesota. He was baptized into the Catholic faith by the priest serving St. Andrews Catholic Church at that time.

He attended elementary school at Granite Falls, Minnesota, and also completed his high school courses there. He was graduated from Granite Falls High School in 1936. Following graduation he was forced to discontinue his formal education due to insufficient funds.

From baptism until 1941, training in the Christian church was practically nil. With no guidance during his youth, he gradually drifted farther and farther from Jesus Christ. In June, 1941, through the efforts of the son of a Lutheran pastor, he saw himself as a lost, and condemned sinner who needed a Savior. But he also saw and laid hold on the Savior he needed, Jesus Christ. He was confirmed into the the Lutheran Church on September 12, 1941, by Rev. Ihno Janssen Sr. at Trinity Lutheran Church, Odessa, Minnesota.

He entered the U. S. Army Air Forces on January 21, 1942. Army service took him to the Hawaiin Islands, Canton Island, Makin Island and Iwo Jima. These years brought assurance to him of the savior who died for him and gradually "all things became new".

He was discharged from the service of his country on November 6, 1945, and enrolled at Concordia College in January, 1946. He had plans of going into the field of social work and planned his curriculum to that end. He graduated in June, 1948 and the call of God was so strong he was forced to enroll at Luther Theological Seminary. On May 27, 1951 he was graduated from the seminary.

He is deeply grateful to Pastor Ihno Janssen Jr., through whose efforts he was persuaded to take catechetical instruction. A spirit of thanks must permeate his heart for the teachers at Concordia College at Moorhead, Minnesota. He is also thankful for the help and encouragement of those Christian teachers at the seminary.

He was united in marriage to Miss Georgia Adolphson on December 17, 1950. He is especially thankful to her for her devotion to him and to the cause of Christ. It was she who was willing to work full time as a nurse in order that the financial obligations might be met.

A special thanks to all the unknown Christians all over the world who prayed and continue to do so, that the laborers in the vineyard might be plentiful.

He has accepted a call, now serves Nazareth, Silverton and Silver Creek congregations located at Holt and Thief River Falls, Minnesota.

Above all, he is grateful to God Who has called and committed to him this ministry of reconciliation. Realizing his own unworthiness, he looks to God "who worketh in you both to will and to work, for his good pleasure".

OUTLAW GUNS

BY E. E. HALLERAN

THE STORY SO FAR: Government Agent Dan Frazer shoots and kills Vince Gale, who is making an attempt on Helen Bartell's life. Then he and her father, Derek Bartell, talk obliquely about a store of arms and ammunition that Bartell has hidden. Frazer tells him that members of his own group are planning to double-cross him to gain control of the munitions for their own purposes. For her protection, Frazer gives Helen the gun he took off the body of Archie Scott, who was murdered because he knew the location of the munitions. As Frazer is leaving the Bartell house, he and Helen see an old man being attacked. Frazer knocks the assailant down and takes his gun.

CHAPTER IX

Dan had halted just inside the doorway. He noted that Ben Chew was not on hand to hear this rather disparaging reference to his daughter, and he wondered briefly how the hotel man would have taken it if he had been around. Mostly, however, his thoughts were less impersonal. He wanted to punch the loud-mouthed deputy for dragging Helen Bartell's name into barroom conversation, yet he knew that he did not dare start anything. He had to keep himself in shadow as much as possible until such time as he was ready to make the move that would be so much more important.

Before he could cross the room to the door which led to the stairway, however, there was an interruption to that modest program. Delaplane turned to face him squarely. The deputy's glance sobered instantly and Frazer had a feeling that the man was struggling for self-control. Oddly enough it did not seem to be Frazer's scowl which caught Delaplane's attention. It was the pair of six-gun's stuck in the big man's belt.

"What you doin' with them guns?" the deputy snapped. "Ain't you heard it's against the law to pack a gun in this town?"

"I heard," Frazer told him coldly. "If you wasn't so drunk maybe you'd keep your mouth shut long enough to let your brain work. Then you'd remember where I got 'em."

"Don't get cute," Delaplane snarled. "I ain't takin' orders from you. I'm givin' 'em. Hand over them guns!" He took two steps forward, but halted abruptly as Frazer came to meet him, eyes hard and hands tense.

Delaplane, Frazer Clash in Saloon

"That's better," Frazer grated. "Don't be nasty. I'm keeping these. Is that clear?"

Delaplane swallowed hard, but braced himself as one of the other men snickered behind him. He obviously was not anxious to try conclusions with this big, calm-eyed man—but he hated to be rawhided before his cronies. "You're under arrest," he finally managed to snap. "Put your hands up."

Frazer knew that he could not risk a showdown fight with the man just now. Still he had the upper hand, and he intended to keep it. For the moment Delaplane was in a quandry, ashamed to back off and afraid to force the issue. Frazer offered him a way out.

"Don't be so touchy," he said with a grin. "This was my night to pick up guns, it seems. I'd be plum loco to start givin' 'em away when they're practically bein' forced on me. Go arrest somebody else if you want to play games."

It was the wrong thing to say. Delaplane's anger flared anew as the onlookers laughed again. He lunged forward with a roar, his right hand clawing for the six-gun which hung at his hip.

Again Frazer moved to meet him—but he made no attempt to pull either of the guns at his belt. Instead he thrust both long arms out ahead of him, his left hand locking the angry deputy's hand in place on his gun butt while the right fist came around in a short, looping arc to land flush on the point of Delaplane's jaw. It had not seemed like a hard punch, nor had Frazer been in a position to put his weight behind the blow, but it landed with a slap that could have been heard in the street. Delaplane straightened up, then sagged and went to the floor.

Dan glanced around at the silent, taut men by the bar. "You boys might pass the word," he observed gently. "Just in case anybody else feels like takin' these hawglegs."

He crossed the room and headed toward the inner stairway, not too much pleased with himself. It had been a pleasure to land that right hook on Delaplane, but it had not been a good bit of strategy. Having another enemy in town would not help the situation any. There were entirely too many people in Mesa Verde who were on the wrong side already.

A kerosene lamp burned dimly in the upper hall and he went directly to his room, throwing the door open and stepping back a moment before entering. Then he lighted a match and glanced about before closing the door and settling down to wait and think in the darkness.

A full half-hour passed before cautious footsteps in the hallway sent him to the door, ready for whatever might come. It was Carson Emery, and the little marshal was obviously in deep trouble. He came in silently, sinking down on a side of the cot while Frazer peered out into the hall and closed the door.

"I hear you slugged Ed," he remarked glumly. "What for?"

Frazer told him. Emery seemed to be puzzling over it, for he remained silent before asking, "Get any idea why he was so all-fired set on takin' them guns?"

"I was thinking about that while I waited for you. Have you figured that Delaplane might be in cahoots with one or the other of these border gangs?"

"No. You figure he is?"

"It looks like it now. Maybe there's something about one of these guns that will give somebody away. Maybe he's out to get it back before I can spot the joker."

"Have you looked 'em over?"

"I haven't had time—and I didn't want to strike a light until you'd been here."

"All right. That can wait. Now what have you got to tell me?"

"Precious little, I'm afraid. I didn't learn much tonight beyond what I knew when I arrived in town and what you told me first. Bartell's hot for this crazy scheme to start a revolution in Sonora. Somebody's out to double-cross him. That somebody pulled a couple of murders to keep from having the Federal government on their necks. It looks to me as though they knew about Scott, but had lost track of him. Then they spotted him again this evening and murdered him in a hurry."

"And you don't know who's back of it?"

"Not exactly. I'm betting that Delaplane is in on the scheme, and I'd put some cash on a wager that a big Dutchman is one of the ringleaders. Now you tell me who he is."

Emery grunted. "I reckon you must mean Emil Kranz. A big hombre with a nice pink complexion and yellow hair."

"That's the party. Tonight he's been chasin' around with a scrawny little Mexican, and once I saw him with Bartell and Ben Chew. What's his ticket?"

"A bad egg, if you ask me. He's one o' them soldiers of fortune that you read about. German cavalryman in the first place, I hear. Got booted out o' the Kraut army for some reason or other and came over here to steal whatever he could. He's been hooked up with two or three shady messes in Mexico, but I don't know who he's workin' for just now. Whoever promises him the biggest amount o' loot, I reckon."

"Right. Now clear me up again on the parties I've got to look out for. The Mexican end of it, I mean."

Frazer Sees Location Of Guns as Main Crisis

"Well, first there's Ramon Vasquez. He's the one I figure is makin' out to be on the same side as the Bartell outfit. How long he'll stay there is a fair question. Likely he's planning to sell Bartell down the river on enough guns. The other jigger is Manuel Candino. He's just plain bandit, but he bosses a pretty good bunch o' fightin' men. How he figures to make any money outa the Yaqui - Bartell - Vasquez business I don't know, but it could be that he's plannin' to take advantage of the general uproar to do some plain and fancy raidin' wherever there's loot to be grabbed."

"Meanwhile this Vasquez and Candino combination comes into the picture. One or the other of them plants a spy in the Bartell camp. They get all the information Bartell has except the actual location of the guns on which the whole show hinges. If they can pick up that item of information they'll move in on Bartell. That will be the moment when Mesa Verde finds out that it's in a mighty awkward spot."

"You're still guessing," Emery protested. "The killers knew somebody was coming out here. Wouldn't that point to somebody with contacts in this country? Some of Bartell's outfit?"

"Not as the killers. Remember that the bandit gang tried to murder Helen Bartell tonight. That doesn't sound like a job handled by her father's gang. To me it adds up to a leak in the Bartell organization. The mining people heard about me — without knowing anything about me—and the information went through to Kranz, probably by way of Ben Chew."

"I surrender," Emery said gloomily. "It could be like that, but my old brain won't stay with all the twists and turns. Maybe you're right."

"I can't afford to wait any longer," Frazer told him. "I think I know enough to go out on a limb and ask for military help. If I'm wrong I'll have myself in plenty of hot water, but I'd rather risk it than to leave this town exposed to the hell that's going to pop before long. My message goes out in the morning."

Ed Delaplane's Interest In Forty-Fives Puzzling

Twenty minutes passed in comparative silence after Carson Emery's departure.

Frazer stood up suddenly, half irritably, and lighted the tiny kerosene lamp which nestled in the wall bracket near the door. Perhaps the business of writing his dispatches would divert his mind from the doubts which were keeping it disturbed.

The light brought a diversion of its own. It reminded him that he needed to inspect the guns which had come into his possession so unexpectedly. Definitely there must have been some reason for Ed Delaplane to get so stubborn about them.

He took the precaution of wedging the fragile chair under the door latch. Then he moved the lamp to the washstand and placed the two guns beside it, trying to remember which weapon had come from which place. They were ordinary Colt's Peacemaker forty-fives both of them plain guns with edar butts. One seemed to be a little newer than the other, but otherwise they were identical. If anyone were to be identified by one of these guns it must be that the weapon's serial number was registered somewhere.

Puzzled, he broke open one of the weapons and found a completely normal condition. Five chambers were loaded and the sixth was empty, the usual safety provision. This must be the gun he had taken from the thief who had tried to rob the prospector. It was the only weapon concerned which had not been fired.

He laid it aside and tried the other. Again there was nothing about the gun to mark it as unusual. A check of its cylinder revealed four loaded shells, an empty case and the usual unloaded chamber. This would be Gale's six-gun. Scott's weapon must have been the one which had been given to Helen Bartell. That would have contained four empty cases, three fired at Scott's murderer and one used in killing Gale.

Quick worry laid hold upon him. If one person in Mesa Verde was in more immediate danger than any other tonight it was Helen Bartell. Already there had been one vicious attempt on her life—and he had given her an almost empty gun with which to defend herself!

Once he started for the door determined to repair the damage, but his judgment warned him against going back to Bartell's place. There was little likelihood of the girl's being threatened again tonight. Even if it should happen she would have one bullet in the gun—as much defense as she would probably have time to use. Anyway, she was a pretty efficient sort of individual. Probably by this time she had reloaded the empty chambers.

He was about to give it up and go to bed when he caught the soft creak of a stair tread. Someone was coming up from the ground floor, trying vainly to move in silence.

He remembered that the left-handed man, the presumed slayer of The Duke, had come here to the hotel. Perhaps this bit of night prowling might be worthy of attention. Moving as silently as possible he picked up one of the guns from the washstand and stuck it in his belt while he worked to unfasten the door latch. Once that task was accomplished without noise he drew the gun and listened, trying to spot the location of the unknown who had come up the steps.

Traffic Courtesy Will Attract Many Tourists to a Home Town

As pointed out in this column last week, the Main Street that happens to be on a national highway can reap big business for the home town during the next two months. Millions of Americans will spend millions of dollars for lodging, gasoline, oil, food, soft drinks, and gadgets as they take to the highways to see their country.

The manner in which the home town greets them and the services offered have much to do with how long the tourist will linger and how much he will spend.

In this connection, the home town that keeps traffic moving, has plenty of parking space, and safe drivers will find the tourist more likely to stop.

These problems differ with each community and are, primarily, problems that can be solved only on the local level. Many small towns have found that driver schools, motorist courtesy campaigns and safety drives have given their community a good name and proven tourist attractions.

Such campaigns can be worked out with the cooperation of local organizations, the police department, merchants and the local publication.

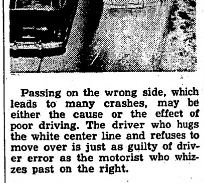
For the people of this community who plan a vacation by private automobile, it would be well to remember that the nation's motorists probably will drive into more accidents this year than ever before. Most of these accidents will be caused by careless drivers, men and women who violate traffic laws and disregard the rules of the road.

What kind of driver is this who will be involved in most of this year's accidents? The composite auto crash of 1951 will involve a sober, mature man who has had several years of driving experience. His car will be in apparently good condition. He will be driving along a dry, open straight stretch of highway on a clear weekend evening. He will be traveling too fast. He will smash into another car.

In other words, it will be the man just down the street. But of course, it won't be you!

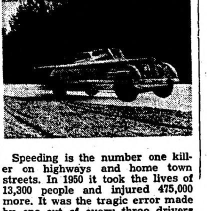
Many home town motorists will have accidents because they begin a trip without properly checking their automobile. Here is an opportunity for the local service station and garage to be of service to their neighbors and friends. Right now he should be advertising through his local newspaper his sevices for checking the home towner's car before he starts his annual vacation.

The accident mentioned above and thousands like it need not happen. The chances are they will not happen if all drivers drive according to the rules and avoid making the errors that kill and maim. Those which cause the geatest number of highway casualties are shown in the following series of pictures from the coming issue of The Lamp, a publication of Standad Oil company.

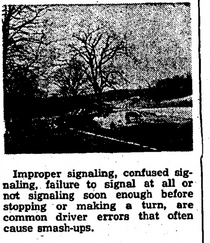


Passing on the wrong side, which leads to many crashes, may be either the cause or the effect of poor driving. The driver who hugs the white center line and refuses to move over is just as guilty of driver error as the motorist who whizzes past on the right.

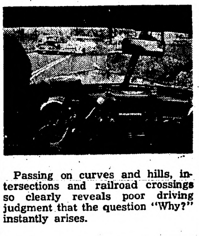
Right-of-way violators cause many serious accidents. Most of them occur at intersections that are clearly marked. However, right-of-way crashes often happen where there are no such signs but where careful drivers could have avoided the collision. The driver who swings out of a driveway onto a busy Main Street without stopping to look obviously violates the right-of-way. So does the driver who, upon entering an unmarked intersection or crossroad, fails to yield the right-of-way to a car already there.



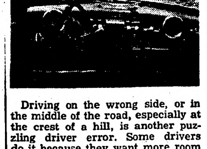
Speeding is the number one killer on highways and home town streets. In 1950 it took the lives of 13,300 people and injured 475,000 more. It was the tragic error made by one out of every three drivers who were involved in last year's serious accidents. Exceeding the legal limit is only one form of speeding. Driving faster than is safe under existing conditions also is speeding.



Improper signaling, confused signaling, failure to signal at all or not signaling soon enough before stopping or making a turn, are common driver errors that often cause smash-ups.



Passing on curves and hills, intersections and railroad crossings so clearly reveals poor driving judgment that the question "Why?" instantly arises.



Driving on the wrong side, or in the middle of the road, especially at the crest of a hill, is another puzzling driver error. Some drivers do it because they want more room on either side in case of a blowout. Others fear driving too far to the right. And some just take their half in the middle.

Reckless driving is the symptom of a dangerous driver-attitude. Whatever form it may take, like dangerous "cutting in," it indicates a selfish disregard for the safety of all others who travel the highway.

It Pays to Check Car Before Trips

According to the best estimates available, some 63,000,000 Americans will make motor trips before the end of the year. Many of them will have accidents if they do not follow the rules of safety as outlined above, or are unfortunate enough to meet a driver who doesn't observe them.

Highways throughout the country were seriously damaged during the past winter by heavy snow and freezing. In many regions highway maintenance is proceeding at a pace geared to traffic needs, and in these only normal precautions need be taken, except motorists should pay strict attention to signs indicating construction projects underway just ahead.

In areas where maintenance and repair are behind schedule, motorists should drive with caution.

AROUND the HOUSE

Items of Interest to the Housewife

Ink stains on rugs, like practically all stains on practically everything, are easiest to handle if they're handled immediately. Pour fresh milk on the stain as soon as it happens, then mop it up. Cover the spot with cornstarch for a few minutes, run the vacuum cleaner over it, and wash the spot with mild soap and water.

New concrete can be laid successfully right on top of an old concrete surface, but be sure, first, to get the old surface perfectly clean with soap and water and have it thoroughly wet when the new concrete is applied.

On summer fiber rugs, oil stains can be removed easily with cleaning fluid. However, they'll show up again, because the fluid removes only the oil on the surface of the fiber. The oil that's been absorbed will be pressed to the surface by traffic. As the stains keep reappearing, keep removing them with cleaning fluid; and eventually all the oil will be gone.

If you can't get to an ink spot on rug immediately, mix up a workable paste of milk and corn meal. Cover the spot liberally with the paste and let it stay twelve hours or, at least, overnight before sweeping it up.

If a concrete floor starts to get powdery—or, if you just want to give it a finished look—try this: Wash the surface thoroughly with soap and water; then apply boiled linseed oil liberally with a paint brush. After two days, wash the floor again, and give it another dose of boiled linseed oil. A third treatment may be necessary in two days. The same result can be achieved by the same method if you use "waterglass" solution instead of linseed oil.

Oil spots on concrete can often be removed with cleaning fluid. If the spots are old, though, mix up a paste of cleaning fluid and fuller's earth. Spread the paste on the spots and wait until it's completely dry before sweeping it off with a broom.

FIRST AID TO THE AILING HOUSE

Selecting A Water Heater

QUESTION: I'm contemplating buying a water heater My water supply has a high lime content and I'd like to know if lime will collect on the walls of a glass-lined heater. I don't know whether to buy a water softener or not. If I can get a satisfactory length of service with a glass lined tank, minus a softener, it will mean a real saving for me. Glass lined tanks are guaranteed against rust and corrosion, but I wonder if the same holds true when there is lime in the water.

ANSWER: The lime would be less likely to stick to a glass lining than it would to a rough metal surface. It sounds like a good investment to me, Regarding a water softener, I believe you have the wrong idea as to the cost of of these units. The Architects Samples Exhibi, 101 Park Ave., New York 17, can furnish you with names of manufacturers and you may find that the price of a good one would not be at all excessive.

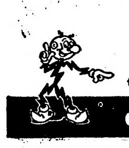
HOW BIG IS 70,000 SQUARE MILES?

The Otter Tail Power Company, operating in parts of North and South Dakota and Minnesota, covers 70,000 square miles — an area almost half again larger than Greece . . . and greater than the six states of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut combined.

It takes tremendous expenditures to bring electricity to many remote areas in this vast 70,000 square miles of territory . . . where there's an average of only 1¼ customer per square mile.

By careful management Otter Tail is doing the job . . . increasing its output of electricity each year (124% since 1945) . . . bringing the comforts of low-cost, electrical living to 90,000 customers in 500 communities and in thousands of farm homes.

All without one penny of taxpayer's money.



Your electric company -- a development of free enterprise through private initiative -- is your best source of low-cost electricity.

Might Say The Birds Got "Nettled"

Had dinner with Tik Bradley the other day, and over a frosty bottle of beer I found out about his job with the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

"Now just exactly what do you do?" I asked him. "Shoot birds with a cannon" he calmly replies.

Seems they actually do use a cannon—to shoot out a net over a flock of birds feeding on the ground. The birds start to take off at the sound of the shot, but the settling net brings them back to earth. Then they're banded around the leg so more can be learned about their migratory habits. Afterwards, they're let loose—and everyone's happy.

From where I sit, it was a good example of how when you learn the real facts they're often not as bad as they may sound at first. Like with people. Get to really know your neighbor and chances are you'll be more tolerant of his preferences—even though they're not your own. Take a good look before you jump to conclusions.

More Corn Per Acre on Midwest Farms Calls For Better Soil Care Plus Plant Food Use

MORE corn per acre—rather than just more acres in corn—is what is needed on many Midwestern farms this year, reports the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee, in a statement issued here.

With the lid off on 1951 corn acreage allotments and prospects of a "feed squeeze" ahead, the need for more efficient soil management methods to build higher corn yields per acre is more critical than ever, says the committee.

Agronomists at Midwestern agricultural colleges are advising farmers to make long range plans now for high crop yields. They point out that the present international emergency may last a long time. And whether there is a hot or cold war, we will steadily need more food in the years ahead.

"The secret of getting and maintaining high corn yields per acre," says the committee's statement, "lies not only in providing a well balanced supply of nutrients, but in giving the soil a backlog of plant food and organic matter on which crops can draw.

"The use of lime and a complete fertilizer containing nitrogen, phosphate and potash is of top importance. Vital, too, is a rotation that centers around deep-rooted legumes such as alfalfa and sweet clover. Well-fertilized legumes, reinforced by manure and crop residues will add tons of valuable organic matter to the soil. This organic matter improves soil tilth, structure and drainage. It conditions the soil to make more efficient use of fertilizer and to produce more bushels of corn per acre.

It's the Corn per Acre, Not the Corn per Ear That Counts.

"Important, too, in getting top corn yields is a planting rate that provides a big enough stalk population to take advantage of the soil's improved fertility. Planting more stalks per acre may cut the size of the ears, but it will increase yields by giving you more ears."

The committee points out that a complete starter fertilizer applied in the row at planting time will get your corn off to a fast, healthy start. It will help speed up maturity and avoid the danger of damage to the corn crop from early autumn frosts.

LYNN J. HEDIN, of Watertown, Minn., owns and runs a Western Auto Store, is the father of three children, repairs TV sets in odd moments. As a businessman and parent, he has a real interest in the state's future. Asked what industries can "do most" for Minnesota's future, he named iron mining and manufacturing. According to a statewide public opinion poll of 2,881 other Minnesotans, Mr. Hedin's views are typical of many.

"What industries can do most for Minnesota's future?"

POLL FINDINGS:

More Minnesotans (32%) name IRON ORE than any other industry...23% say FARMING...others mention MANUFACTURING, MILLING. What's your opinion?

Whatever your opinion as to the industry that can do most for Minnesota's future, you'll be interested in a dramatic scene recently enacted on the Mesabi.

Here near a little town named Mountain Iron, 250 people gathered last month to watch a man turn the first spadeful of earth at the site of an experimental manufacturing plant, the second of its kind in the state.

Squeezing iron ore out of rock

Into this plant, to the tune of two million tons a year, will roar a granite-hard, iron-bearing rock: taconite. Out of it will roll half a million tons of a talcum-fine powder richer in iron than the ores that made the Mesabi famous.

First, however, money must be spent by the millions. Buildings to house costly machinery must be erected, power drills bought, shops built, water and power systems installed. Yet this project is small change compared with what may follow.

$400,000,000 for Minnesota?

For although Minnesota ore producers are risking $40 million in experimental plants like the one at Mountain Iron, they're facing expenditures up to $400 million for large-scale taconite manufacturing plants if their experiments pan out.

That's why the earth-breaking ceremony last month meant so much to Minnesota. Big-time taconite production can spell greater employment, bigger business both local and statewide, larger farm markets, continuing revenue for Minnesota schools and municipalities.

Competition looms up

Will it all come true? Minnesota's ore producers hope so—but sound a note of caution. The future of ore mining rests on ore production costs. Minnesota ores —high-grade, low-grade and taconite— must be produced cheap enough to compete with outside ores.

And because ore costs are closely related to ore taxes, the producers ask for fair treatment. As one of them puts it: "This golden opportunity for the North Star State is too big to let it slip through her fingers . . . We are not pleading for special favors; we ask only that you treat this industry the same way you do any other Minnesota industry."

THE IRON MINING INDUSTRY OF MINNESOTA

A FAIR DEAL FOR MINNESOTA'S IRON ORE MEANS A GOOD DEAL FOR YOU

Tight Rope

By Allison L. Burks

Stella Moore and Nurse Carol, fleeing the Thorndyke mansion where Stella has been masquerading as Dorinda LaCroix, the granddaughter of old Mrs. Thorndyke, stop at an all-night hamburger stand to determine if a car which was behind them was actually pursuing them. Three mysterious deaths have excited and alarmed the women. The car stops and Edward Thorndyke, old Mrs. Thorndyke's son and the man who had employed Stella to play out the masquerade to save Mrs. Thorndyke from the shock of knowing the real Dorinda is dead, enters the restaurant. He chides Stella for not reporting her suspicions to him and drives her to the home of Cleve Adams where Mrs. Adams takes her in.

CHAPTER XVIII

"We've got a girl here who needs a lot of sleep, Mother. We'll leave explanations until tomorrow. If you've an extra nightie or pajamas or whatever it is you gals wear, drag it out and tuck our little neighbor into bed." Dorinda caught the warning glance he shot at his mother.

Mrs. Adams asked no more questions. She produced a white nightdress "reserved especially for visitors who don't bring their own," she told Dorinda gaily; she escorted the girl to a guest room down the hall and helped her undress; she went to the door and took the glass of hot milk Cleve brought, and watched Dorinda as she drank it.

Finally she tucked her into bed and, bending over, kissed her cheek. "Good night, my dear," she said gently and left her.

"You needn't feel afraid any more." The echo of Cleve's words was the last thing Dorinda remembered that night. "You needn't feel afraid—"

She slept the deep dreamless sleep which comes with relaxation from strain and did not awake until morning drew a penciled line of sunlight across her face and her eyes opened and blinked in its blinding dazzle.

She felt rested and hungry. Dressed again in the brown pullover and skirt, she ran downstairs. The front door stood open to the soft spring air and beyond the protecting screen she could see Cleve pacing up and down the porch, whistling softly to himself.

He looked around at her call and hurried inside. The screen door closed behind him with a bang. She watched him come, a little stab of pain at her heart. If he could always be this close, always where he could come at her call. But would he want to be—after today? She shook her head driving away the thought. They were together now. She would pretend that now was all that mattered.

"I've been waiting for you." Cleve's voice was a caress. "Mother has already gone to Trentville, marketing. How do you feel?"

"Hungry," she laughed.

"Good!" But as she looked up at him, she saw the frown that creased his forehead.

Sheriff Asks Dorinda About Night's Events

"Dorinda," he asked abruptly. "Did you see Lana last night?"

"Lana!" she repeated in surprise. "Why, no. I haven't seen her since she went out yesterday before lunch. What makes you ask?"

"She seems to be missing. Your Aunt Harriet phoned this morning. She said Lana'd been gone all night and she seemed to think you must know something about it since you'd been gone, too. Although she admitted Mr. Thorndyke had told her where you were and that you didn't know anything about Lana's absence."

"I certainly don't," she assured him. "She never tells me—nor anyone else I should judge from what her mother says—where she's going or when she'll be back."

"I told your aunt I was sure you hadn't seen her. I advised her to call Poole—he must be back by now—and she said she would. She was terribly upset. She said Lana's never stayed away all night before."

"It's queer. Cleve, you don't suppose she was one of the persons Carol heard—whispering?"

His face hardened. "It doesn't seem likely. Why on earth would Lana have it in for you? You haven't interfered with any of her plans, have you?"

"I'm sure I haven't. She's always away. About the only time we meet is at meals. I don't suppose we exchange half a dozen sentences a day. You know, Cleve, I can't believe she's really missing. She's probably stayed all night some place and will show up soon."

"I think so myself. Let's not worry until we know there's something to worry about." He piloted Dorinda toward a door a short distance down the hall. "Breakfast, Myrtle, and plenty of it," he shouted kitchenward.

Twenty minutes later she pushed back her plate. "What a breakfast!" She sighed. "It's wonderful being here, Cleve. I feel so free."

"Only one word from you and the place is yours for life. You—" He stopped as Myrtle poked her black head through the door.

"That sheriff man's here to see you, Mr. Cleve."

"Oh, bother," Cleve grumbled, "just when I had you, helpless with food, at my mercy!"

But Dorinda noticed how swiftly he put down his napkin and sprang to his feet. He dropped a quick kiss on her hair as he passed. "See you later, sweet. Don't run away."

When she finished drinking her coffee and went out into the hall, she could see the two men standing on the front porch apparently absorbed in conversation. But Poole, as if he had eyes in the back of his head, wheeled around and at his imperative "Miss LaCroix," she went slowly toward him.

"Cleve's been telling me about your experience last night," the sheriff said gravely. He pushed his big hat back upon his grizzled hair, hooked a thumb in his leather belt. "Suppose you tell me the whole thing just as it happened."

She sat down in the porch swing. She felt more at ease with Poole this morning than she had on the two previous occasions he had questioned her. He seemed milder, less distrustful.

He listened intently as she talked, nodding now and then, once or twice stopping her to ask a question.

Dorinda stared at him, her brown eyes wide with amazement.

When she had finished, he rubbed his chin contemplatively and said, "Thank you, Miss LaCroix. I think that's quite clear."

He took a step toward the porch steps, paused as Dorinda cried anxiously, "But Mr. Poole, who do you think it was in the hall last night? Cleve's told me that Lana's disappeared. Do you think—?"

"I think we'll find Lana Thorndyke without any trouble," he assured her grimly. "Don't worry about it, Miss LaCroix. If I don't miss my guess, we'll have this whole mess cleared up in the next twenty-four hours." His wide mouth twitched. "That's not for publication though." He lifted two fingers to his hat brim.

Cleve followed him out to his car, stood talking for a few minutes and then ensconced himself comfortably in the seat beside the driver to continue the conversation.

Edward Tells Dorinda Of Life With Mother

Trixie came and jumped up in the swing beside Dorinda, and kissed her hand with a moist pink tongue. "Where's Randy, Trix?" the girl asked mournfully but the dog only wagged her stumpy tail and pushed her head against the girl's arm.

The sun was warm against Dorinda's fair hair. She leaned back against the pillows, one hand on Trixie's rough coat, surrendering to the peaceful quiet of the morning. It was there Edward found her when he came up the porch steps.

She sat up suddenly, blinking at him, half asleep. Cleve and Poole were gone. Trixie, curled up beside her, barked protestingly as she moved.

Edward looked at her anxiously. "You're all right?" He pushed the dog out of his way and sat down beside Dorinda in the swing. His glance swept to the open door, to the closed windows overlooking the porch. "It seems private enough here. Where is everyone?"

"Mrs. Adams has gone to market. I don't know where Cleve is. I think he's gone away with the sheriff. They were here a little while ago. I must have gone to sleep."

He nodded, satisfied. "No wonder you're tired, poor child, after last night." His face looked pale and tired beneath his smooth black hair. "I've had a hellish morning, Dorinda. Lana seems to have run away, the little fool, and Harriet has been having hysterics all over the place. I'm not worried about the girl particularly. I think she has a peculiar ability to look after her own interests, but it's the inconsiderateness of her going off just at this time. Naturally, it can't help but make Poole more suspicious of us all."

His dark eyes met hers and slid away. "I don't demand a great deal of life, Dorinda. Just peace and what I consider a reasonable amount of comfort. Sometimes it seems to me that everyone around me is in a conspiracy to destroy the things I value." His lips were set in morose lines of self-pity.

"But that isn't what I came for." He cleared his throat uneasily. "The time has come when I've got to tell you a few things, my dear. It—it's not exactly pleasant for me but I can't evade it any longer. What I have to say is partly an explanation, partly a confession."

He sat upright, one plump hand on either knee. She looked down at his round white fingers, seeing, without knowing she saw, the well manicured nails, the fine black hairs along the third finger joints.

"I loved my mother, Dorinda. But in her way she was a hard woman. Perhaps not hard, but inflexible. She didn't believe in sycophants, she didn't want her children ever to think they must cater to her, yield to her whims for the sake of favors received. She wanted us to be free to live our own lives. Underneath this may have been the feeling that she didn't want anyone to look forward to her death or be placed in the position of waiting for her to die.

"When I finished college, she made over to me my half of the money my father had left. She would have done the same for my sister except that Laura made an early marriage to a wealthy man. Mother had a little money of her own which came from her own family. She would have made it suffice if necessary even though it meant a simpler mode of living. In her will that money was designed for charity.

"At any rate, it was understood that the other half of my father's fortune was to go to Laura or any children she might have. I had had my share."

Edward shifted nervously. He got up and walked over to the porch rail, staring out over the clipped turf. When he turned back to Dorinda, he remained on his feet, leaning against one of the square painted posts which supported the roof.

Tries to Rationalize Decision to Deceive

"Apparently, I wasn't as wise as I thought — or as my mother thought. I know she had expected me to go into some business or profession of my own or to at least leave the money in the safe and conservative investments my father had made. But I traveled, I enjoyed life. I had what no doubt you would consider a great deal of money. But I didn't think it enough. I wanted to double it. It isn't necessary to go into details. I speculated—and lost.

He frowned moodily. "However, that's beside the point. The years went by and somehow I hadn't broached the subject which was constantly on my mind. It was difficult.

"Then the war in Europe came. Laura died and Mother became critically ill. I went after my sister's child. You know what happened. I was in a panic. We didn't tell Mother that Dorinda was dead. It would have killed her. And by the terms of her will, if Dorinda died before my mother, the money would have been divided among a number of charitable institutions she favored. It was then the inspiration came to me to find a substitute granddaughter—you."

Edward smoothed back his black hair in his familiar gesture. He came back to the porch swing and sat down close beside Dorinda and went on in a lowered voice. "Believe me, I meant no harm. In the beginning my only thought was to prolong my mother's life. As I told you, I loved my mother. And I had to have time to persuade her to change her will.

"But after you came and the impersonation was so successful, the idea came to me that even if I failed with Mother, and that fear was always with me, there seemed to be no reason why we shouldn't go on as we were. You were my mother's heiress, you'd have the money. If we divided it—"

"Good Heavens!" Dorinda stared at him, her brown eyes wide with amazement. "You didn't think I'd take the money, that I'd stay there, that I'd be Dorinda always, did you?" She was too astonished to be angry.

"It's not worth that much to me. To play a part all my life—"

"You'd get used to it. After awhile you'd have believed you really were Dorinda. And neither of us would have been in a position to betray the other. I believe it would have been a wise and successful venture, only—" He paused, moistening his lips.

"Only!" she repeated softly, her eyes filled with the horror of a dawning realization. "Only someone wanted your mother's heiress out of the way. If I had died—who'd get the money?"

Moose Looked Into The House

Have you ever heen greeted at the back door by a pair of moose? Such an incident was recently experienced by Mr. Loyd Mangus, assistant Refuge Manager of the Mud Lake National Wildlife refuge. Mr. Mangus awoke one morning, glanced out the window and observed two adult moose standing within thirty yards of the house. Quickly grabbing a movie camera to record the event, Mr. Mangus hurried to the back door only to find that one of the moose had approached to within ten feet of the house making it impossible to leave the house without trightening the two moose into nearby woods. While contemplating this situation from just inside the screen door, Mr. Mangus watched one moose walk up to the house, and while standing on the sidewalk actnally looked through one of the windows.

Several feet of movie film were made of the visit after the first moose had rejoined the second moose at a point twenty yards from the house. The film will be incorporated into the film now being prepared by the Refuge as a "pictorial review of Refuge operations and management activities.

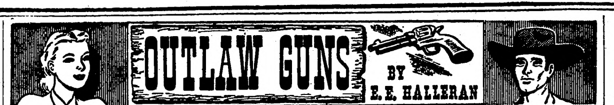
NO MORE CONSTIPATION
"THANKS TO ALL-BRAN!"
"Before I started to eat ALL-BRAN regularly, I had a great deal of trouble with constipation. Now—thanks to ALL-BRAN I'm regular!" Mrs. Hessie Hamilton, 2212 Millet Street, Flint, Mich. Just one of many unsolicited letters from ALL-BRAN users. If you suffer from constipation due to lack of dietary bulk, try this: Eat an ounce (about ½ cup) of crisp Kellogg's ALL-BRAN daily, and drink plenty of water! If not completely satisfied after 10 days return empty box to Kellogg's, Battle Creek, Mich. Get DOUBLE YOUR MONEY BACK!



THE STORY SO FAR: During the course of his first evening in Mesa Verde, where he is investigating the disappearance of arms and ammunition along the border, Dan Frazer has collected three guns—one from Archie Scott, another agent, who was killed before he could tell Frazer the location of the munitions; one from Vince Gale, whom Frazer killed when he saw him trying to shoot Helen Bartell, and one from a man whom he knocked down in the act of attacking an old prospector. Frazer gives Helen Scott's gun for her protection and retains the other two. In the hotel barroom, Ed Delaplane attempts to take the two guns from Frazer.

CHAPTER X

It was no great problem. Something rustled just beyond the door, and Frazer knew that the prowler's objective was this particular room. He could sense, rather than hear, the metallic rasp of the door latch being tried as he edged back, readying himself for almost anything. It might be that Carson Emery was coming back for another conference, or it might be that someone had discovered the mistake of the afternoon. This marauder of the night might be out to get the man they had failed to kill in the mountains.

The door opened an inch or two and he knew that he had guessed wrong again. The familiar tang of heavy perfume identified the intruder. The red-headed girl was coming back for another visit. But was she alone this time?

He let her come fairly into the room, then he reached out with his left hand to seize her in a grip which kept her helpless. She gasped, but smothered the sound as he whirled her out of the doorway. It was almost the only sound Dan made as he covered the dark hallway with his gun, trying to see whether anyone else was out there.

The girl fought savagely but in complete silence as he kept her practically helpless. He paid no attention until he was sure that she had been unaccompanied, then he nudged the door shut and ordered roughly, "Stop that clawing or I'll have to use both hands on you."

The Red-Headed Girl Invades Room Again

The threat sounded a little ridiculous in his own ears, but it seemed to impress the prisoner. The girl stopped her frantic kicking and whimpered, "You hurt."

"Sure. But what did you expect—prowling around here like this?"

Her voice changed abruptly, its whine turning into something almost coy as she began, "Can't a girl. . . ?"

"Don't give me any of that siren talk!" he interrupted. "I let you do it the other time, but I'm not that easy. Did you expect to stick a knife in my ribs, or was it to be a gun job?"

She tried to slap him again, so he kissed her—hard. Then he held her at arm's length and spoke grimly. "Get the idea?"

She surrendered. "All right. What do you want to know?"

He waited until she had seated herself in the chair by the window, then he asked grimly, "Who sent you this time?"

"Delaplane," she replied finally.

"Not your father?" he asked, trying to conceal his surprise.

"No."

"Did Delaplane tell you to look for the same thing your father sent you after the other time?"

"Why do you say my father sent me?"

"Don't duck the question. He sent you first and you went back to tell him that you had failed. Of course, you came back later after I left the room. New tell it straight. What did each of them want?" He managed to put as much menace into his voice as he thought would be effective.

"Father wanted to know whether you were really the man you claimed to be," she said doggedly. "I couldn't find anything to tell by."

"And Delaplane?"

"He wanted me to steal your guns."

"Sounds pretty fishy to me," he scoffed, still trying to make her talk freely.

"Let me tell you." Some of her anger had fled now. She was concerned, serious. "Bartell and a bunch of the mining people are planning to stir up a revolution over in Mexico so they'll have an excuse to step in and take control. They want to run the part of the country where they are locating some copper mines. What they don't seem to know is that they're not in the game alone. There's a bandit named Candino who's planning to step in at the right minute and take everything for himself. That will mean a big battle and some real fighting all along the border. If we don't have Candino's cut-throats roaring through Mesa Verde it will be mighty queer."

"So that's Delaplane's yarn, is it? What's he trying to do?"

"Don't sneer. It's the truth. Ed hopes that he can block the whole thing before it comes to a head."

"And why does he want my guns?" he asked sharply.

Again she hesitated, but this time came up with a reply. "Guns are not allowed in Mesa Verde," she said lamely.

He switched topics again, feeling that he would get nowhere by pressing either of the previous questions. "Where does your father stand on this deal?"

This time she was prompt, seemingly frank. "My father is helping Bartell."

Another Intruder Trapped by Frazer

"Why did he want you to search my stuff?"

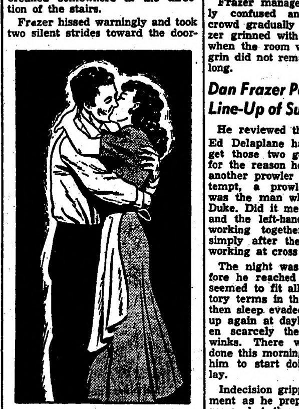
"I think he was afraid you might be a Federal agent. He mentioned particularly that I should search for identification papers."

"No more than that?"

"No."

He considered her answers for several moments and in the intense silence of the room the next sound came loudly enough to startle both of them. A floor board had creaked somewhere in the direction of the stairs.

Frazer hissed warningly and took two silent strides toward the doorway. In the moment that his back was turned the girl went through the open window. He heard the rustle of her clothing and looked around just in time to see her drop out of sight. There was a thump from below and then the sound of footsteps. Frazer grinned in amusement but sobered quickly as another board creaked in the hallway. The traffic was getting heavy.



She tried to slap him again, so he kissed her—hard. Then he held her at arm's length. "Get the idea?"

The door opened silently and Frazer could hear the soft breathing of the intruder. Still the unknown did not come into the room. Apparently he was waiting to see whether he had been heard. There was a long moment in which Frazer feared that his own breathing would be audible to the prowler. Then there was a soft shuffle as a man entered the room.

He moved directly to the washstand and picked up the gun. He was only a shadowy form against the window, but Frazer could see that he was a small man. He also realized that the fellow was pocketing the weapon. That was interesting—and highly significant.

The intruder seemed to hesitate, fumbling around at the washstand before turning toward the cot as though to continue his search. It must have been then that he realized the cot was empty. A nervous grunt escaped from his lips and he swung quickly toward the door.

Frazer met him grimly, swinging a hard fist to the point of the man's jaw. The fellow went down without even a grunt, his fall shaking the flimsy building. Instantly Frazer was upon him, recovering the gun even as he made certain that his victim was completely out.

Somewhere in the hotel voices were raised in irritated inquiry, but Frazer ignored them long enough to strike a match and study his man. Then, as the intruder began to stir painfully, he blew out the match and stepped out into the hall.

"Somebody come here a-runnin'," he yelled. "I got a burglar. Give me a hand, somebody."

He smothered a grin as he continued to yell, starting an uproar which was not quite enough to cover the hasty sounds of a man scrambling out of a window.

Frazer chuckled silently in the darkness and continued to shout an occasional comment until he had a crowd of serious men around him. Then he went back into his room and struck a light. Instantly he became broadly rueful. "Gosh! He got away. Musta slipped outa the window while I was hollerin'."

He hurried to the window, still keeping up his act. "There he goes—through that alley. I saw him in the moonlight. Somebody get out and grab him!"

"What was the critter after?" a nightshirted individual growled.

"Danged if I can make it out," Frazer confessed, scratching his head perplexedly. "I sorta dropped off to sleep without shuckin' outa my clothes and the next thing I knew I heard this jasper fumblin' around. I jumped outa bed and caught him fair with a good solid punch. Then I hustled out into the hall and hollered for help. I reckon I wasn't more'n half awake or I'd ha' knowed better."

Another man sniffed loudly and laughed. "Who's been drinking cologne in these here parts? Yo' sure yore burglar didn't wear skirts?"

Frazer managed to look properly confused and the bantering crowd gradually disappeared. Frazer grinned with quiet satisfaction when the room was clear, but the grin did not remain with him very long.

Dan Frazer Ponders Line-Up of Suspects

He reviewed the facts carefully. Ed Delaplane had tried twice to get those two guns, certainly not for the reason he had given. Then another prowler had made the attempt, a prowler who probably was the man who had killed The Duke. Did it mean that Delaplane and the left-handed gunman were working together, or were they simply after the same thing and working at cross purposes?

The night was nearly spent before he reached a conclusion that seemed to fit all of the contradictory terms in the problem. Even then sleep evaded him and he was up again at daybreak, having taken scarcely the proverbial forty winks. There was much to be done this morning, and it behooved him to start doing it without delay.

Indecision gripped him for a moment as he prepared to leave the room, but then he acted deliberately. Defying Carson Emery's peace rules, he tucked his own gun into his waistband where it would be concealed by the tail of the coat he had elected to wear. The other two weapons he left in plain sight on the washstand, first taking care to mark their positions carefully. He had every expectation of finding them gone when he returned, but there was a chance that the next searcher of the room would merely inspect them, and he wanted to know whether such an inspection had taken place. The chances of losing them was no longer a source of concern.

He went downstairs to find a half dozen men already attacking the pancakes, eggs and coffee which Sally Chew was hustling in from the kitchen.

The red-haired girl avoided his eye, attending strictly to her chores, and he wondered how much she knew about the final act of the past night's performance. He made no attempt to draw her into conversation, however, content to bolt his meal and get on with the business of the day.

His first stop after leaving the hotel was at the grubby little post office. He had been loath to entrust his messages to the sort of postmaster to be expected in a place like Mesa Verde, but it eased his mind to see old Petey helping with the outgoing mail. The stage driver had already displayed his jealous solicitude for postal integrity, so Frazer dropped his letters into the slot and went out with an eased mind.

A red sun was already glaring across the tops of the eastern ramparts and he could feel the early heat of it as he headed for Bartell's store. This would be the important call of the morning. Not only did he have important business to discuss with both Helen Bartell and her father, but there was always that other interest which had nothing to do with the troubles of the border. Even in time of danger a man couldn't very well avoid having ideas about a girl like Helen Bartell.

He found the store closed up tightly, the wooden shutters still on the front windows. Not wanting to create a disturbance in the street, he went around through the alley where Gale had lurked in ambush, and found himself in a back yard which separated the store from a fair sized stable. A man was there, harnessing a pair of sturdy bays to a buckboard. It was the wiry little prospector who had been rescued from the street the previous evening.

He ignored Frazer's greeting for a moment, then grinned in belated recognition. "Howdy, pard," he hailed. "I was wonderin' what happened to yo'. I ain't had a chance to thank yo' fer takin' care o' me last night. So thanks."

Farm Safety Week Is Spurred By High Accident Death Rate

This home town and every one like it in the nation has a tangible reasons for participation in National Farm Safety Week which will be observed July 22-28. For it is agriculture upon which the home towns of America have built their economic structure. Every merchant on Main Street in this community depends upon agriculture to keep the doors of his business open and the goods flowing across his counters.

The death of a farm worker, the destruction of a barn by fire, the loss of farm machinery through accident has a direct influence upon this town's economy. Anything that reduces the nation's agricultural production program will be felt in this community's economical and social structure.

This does not take into account the seriousness af farm accidents from the standpoint of suffering and sorrow they bring to families and friends.

Realizing these facts, many rural communities have planned farm safety campaigns in cooperation with the national observance. Merchants have found that incorporation of farm safety features in their advertising creates good will among the farm folks. Civic groups and newspapers have planned cooperative advertising and promotion campaigns to impress upon their farm neighbors the importance they play in the community and the vital necessity of farm safety today.

The national campaign is sponsored by the National Safety Council, a non-profit, non-commercial association.

The importance of safety on the farm has added significance this year. The bureau of agricultural economics reports 1,200,000 fewer farm workers today than 10 years ago—during which time farm mechanization has more than doubled. Due to the need of increased farm production in this time of national crisis, it is likely that many more women and unskilled workers will have to operate tractors, farm trucks, and other machines. Added safety precautions must be taken for the protection of these unskilled workers.

Farm workers had an accidental death rate of more than twice that of workers in non-agricultural industries in 1950. The death rate was 57 per 100,000 workers, while in non-agricultural industries the average death rate was 22.

Here are the highlights of the National Safety Council's annual report on accidents to farm residents.

1. Total farm resident deaths from accidents were 15,500 in 1950. Injuries totaled about 1,300,000.
2. Farm home deaths totaled 3,900, with approximately 550,000 nonfatal injuries.
3. Motor vehicles killed 6,300 farm residents in 1950 and injured 220,000 more.
4. The total of farm work deaths was 4,300, which accounted for more than 25 per cent of the nation's occupational death toll for 1950.
5. Public non-motor vehicle deaths, such as drownings, took the lives of about 1,600 farm residents.

On the basis of these figures, the Safety Council reports that one of every 19 farm residents in the United States will suffer a disabling injury from an accident in 1951.

Farmers and their families can help in the safety program by adopting safe practices to eliminate individual carelessness or thoughtlessness, which is one of the greatest causes of accidents.

The following pictures illustrate a number of farm safety rules:

KEEP MACHINES IN GOOD REPAIR: Make sure your equipment is in safe working condition. This farmer is sharpening his mower sickle on the grindstone. Other safe practices to adopt in keeping machines in good repair include being sure all guards and safety devices are in place.

WATCH YOUR STEP TO PREVENT FALLS: Keep walkways and steps in good repair, unobstructed and well lighted. This farm boy might fall for an accident! The stairway has no handrails, grain and hay are scattered on the steps and the bottom step is broken.

SPEAK TO ANIMALS WHEN APPROACHING THEM: Keep them calm by acting with calm self assurance yourself. Mishandling of horses, hogs and cows cause many injuries each year. And another thing: There's never a 'safe' bull!

USE THE RIGHT TOOLS FOR THE JOB: Make sure your tools are in good, safe condition. Keep them in a safe place. Keep things systematic in your home and on your farm. Have a place for everything and keep everything in its place.

BE 'FIRESIGHTED': Store fuel safely away from buildings on your farm. Other safe practices to adopt include: Don't smoke around the barn. Pour gasoline or kerosene outdoors to prevent the accumulation of treacherous vapors.

Farm Tractor a Vehicle? Not Always

When is a vehicle not a vehicle? This may sound like a foolish question, but there is a reason for it. According to a survey of state laws on driving while under the influence of liquor, recently conducted by the National Safety Council, at least seven states do not include farm tractors in the legal definition of a motor vehicle although they can be used as such.

The survey was made because numerous accidents on the nation's highways every year involve tractors and automobiles. Many times no automobile was involved, just a tractor.

In those states where the survey showed tractors are not included in the legal definition of a motor vehicle, a farmer can have his driver's license suspended, crank up his tractor and head for a tavern without risking arrest for anything worse than creating a public nuisance.

Iron Curtain Also Cuts Bering Strait Fur Swaps

Washington, D.C.—The Iron Curtain is also a Fur Curtain between Big and Little Diomede.

No longer do American cigarettes, tea, flour and sugar buy Siberian fox pelts and walrus-tusk ivory across the three-mile channel of icy water which separates Russian from American soil, midway across Bering Strait, the National Geographic Society reports.

Russian soldiers man a lookout post on a rocky shoulder of Big Diomede Island, easternmost sentry station of Soviet sovereignty. Staring across the International Date Line at U.S.-owned Little Diomede, for three years they have cut off all trade and social calls among Eskimo families who literally have relatives on both sides of the world, yet are only a few minutes' paddle apart.

Since the glacial age the Diomedes, twin mountain peaks protruding above the surface of Bering Strait, have served as steppingstones between Asia and America. In 1867 Russia sold Little Diomede with Alaska to the United States, but retained Big Diomede.

Each island supports an Eskimo village. Their inhabitants scratch a living from sea and land by hunting walruses, whales, seals, bears and foxes.

Little Diomede families, living closer to Siberia than to Alaska, once traded regularly with their Russian neighbors.

Painful Corsets

In Queen Elizabeth's day ladies wore corsets which gave them a painful but elegant 13-inch waist; 50 years ago standards and waistlines had been relaxed to a more comfortable 18-20 inches; in the interests of health, girdle manufacturers today generally set 24 inches as the minimum for foundation garments they make.

"With 550 acres to farm, I have plenty of opportunities to judge tractor tires. About six years ago I had my first experience with Firestone Traction-Center Tires, and today I have them on all my tractors. In my judgment, they're the best tires money can buy."

CHAMPIONS For Both

THAT'S the way it is in most farming localities — Some farmers want Open-Center Tires, while others find that Traction-Centers do a better job in their soil conditions. In all probability, you have a definite preference, too.

If it's an Open-Center you like best, try the Firestone Champion Open-Center Tire. You'll find that its curved bars pull better, its Flared Tread Openings keep the tire clean, and its wide, flat tread wears longer than treads of other Open-Center Tires.

Or—if you think a Traction-Center Tire will do your job best, try the one and only Firestone Traction-Center, the choice of more than a million farmers. Remember — only Firestone gives you your choice between the greatest Open-Center and the only Traction-Center Tire on the market today.

HOW BIG IS 70,000 SQUARE MILES?

The Otter Tail Power Company, operating in parts of North and South Dakota and Minnesota, covers 70,000 square miles -- an area almost half again larger than Greece ... and greater than the six states of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut combined.

It takes tremendous expenditures to bring electricity to many remote areas in this vast 70,000 square miles of territory ... where there's an average of only 1¼ customer per square mile.

By careful management Otter Tail is doing the job ... increasing its output of electricity each year (124% since 1945) ... bringing the comforts of low-cost, electrical living to 90,000 customers in 500 communities and in thousands of farm homes.

All without one penny of taxpayer's money.

Your electric company -- a development of free enterprise through private initiative -- is your best source of low-cost electricity.

OTTER TAIL POWER COMPANY

Bacteria Count in Milk Lowered Thanks to Rural Electric Power

Clarence and Milo Swenson, who operate their farm about 8 miles southwest of Fertile, Minnesota, believe rural electric power has been largely responsible for lowering the bacteria count in their milk.

"Our milk now has a bacteria count which is considerably lower than the count required for Grade "A" milk," says Clarence Swenson (above). "Doing the whole job electrically has certainly meant extra cleanliness in our operation."

The Swenson Brothers have had rural electric power for four years, have now established a milking parlor for extra speed and convenience.

"The three minutes per cow it takes us to milk with the electric milking machine is about one-half the time it used to take by hand," says Swenson. "And, of course, that means we need only half as much help. Our low bacteria count tells how clean the electric milker is."

The Swenson Brothers' herd consists of 38 Holsteins. Naturally they make use of rural electric power in cooling the milk and in caring for it in other ways.

This is another example of rural electric power doing an outstanding job for Upper Midwest farmers. On farm production work or in household chores, electricity is the handiest, most dependable hired helper you can have. Just try giving it an extra job today — see how much more convenient it is for you.

Soil Building Key To Higher Yields, Lower Output Costs

CHICAGO — Farm production costs have nearly tripled since the prewar days of 1935-39, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee in a statement issued here.

"Farm wages are now three and a half times the 1935-39 average, according to U. S. Department of Agriculture statistics," says the statement. "The cost of seed, feed, and many other things farmers buy has soared.

"Meanwhile, farm prices have slumped and many economists expect a further easing in the period ahead.

"Farmers can meet the impact of higher production costs and lower prices by good soil management that steps up crop producing efficiency and cuts output costs per unit. With fertilizer still one of the 'best buys' in farm production costs, soil building for high production is more profitable than ever.

"Good soil management means teamwork in which a number of different measures back each other up. These include a good rotation, built around deep-rooted legumes, liming, the use of phosphate and potash fertilizer, the return of barnyard manure and crop aftermaths to the soil.

"Working together these members of the soil management team will build up your soil's organic matter, improve tilth and drainage and give crop roots more living space in which to forage for plant nutrients."

Fertilizers Build Farm Soil's Supply Of Organic Matter

ORGANIC matter plays an essential part in soil fertility, but chemical fertilizers are necessary to build up the organic matter supply in large land areas, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee, in citing a recent statement by Dr. L. M. Turk, head of the Soil Science Department of Michigan State College.

Dr. Turk pointed out that those who advocate the use of compost or manure to increase the soil's organic content are performing a definite service. But in condemning the use of chemical fertilizer, he said, "some people are doing a distinct disservice to the nation."

"For efficient crop production," he said, "lime, fertilizers and organic matter must go hand in hand. Organic matter is dependent upon plants. And plants are dependent, among other things, upon an adequate supply of soil minerals."

The most effective means of adding organic matter to large fields is by an intelligent use of purely inorganic fertilizer, Dr. Turk believes. Growing a cover crop through the use of commercial fertilizer and plowing it under adds greatly to the organic matter in the soil.

Dr. Turk said no proof has been offered that crops grown without chemical fertilizer are more free from disease and insects than are crops produced with commercial fertilizer.

Poker From Persia

It is believed that poker is an adaption of a Persian game and was brought to the United States by way of New Orleans. Full-deck poker with 52 cards was not played until about 1830, while "draw" poker did not come into existence until the Civil war.

No Burning Permits to be Issued

Mr. Dick Willems, Forest Supervisor State Conservation Dept. Warroad, has instructed all local Fire Wardens that no burning permits may now be issued. This order will be in effect until a definite change in weather conditions reduces the hazard.

All land owners and farm operators are again advised that burning cannot be undertaken unless a substantial firebreak is first constructed completely around the area to be burned.

Any individual who sets a fire without taking proper precautions for preventing spread of fire on to adjacent lands, or any person who fails to immediately report a running fire that enters his lands is subject to arrest, if such unreported fire spreads from the premises.

It is hoped that all land owners concerned will co-operate with state officials in efforts to reduce the uncontrolled burning of forest, brush, and marsh lands.

If further information is desired local wardens Harvey Wagner, Middle River, R. W. Hunt, Mud Lake Refuge, Elmer Thompson, Middle River, Clarence Wold, Agdar Twp. should he contacted.

Topdressing Alfalfa After First Cutting Holds Thicker Stands

YOU can add extra life to alfalfa stands and keep thick pasture growth in late summer and fall by top-dressing after the first cutting with phosphate and potash fertilizer, points out the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee.

The alfalfa plants will push out new growth faster. Roots will have a better chance to store up reserves of high energy starches and sugars. The soil will benefit from large amounts of active organic matter that help build tilth and structure.

Agronomists report that well fertilized legumes can make fuller use of soil moisture and of the carbon, oxygen and other nutrients taken from the air. Their taproots can probe deeper into the earth, carrying phosphate and potash from the surface on down to the moist soil zone below.

When well-fed legumes are turned under, they rot quickly to form humus, because they are packed with nutrients which feed the soil organisms which break down organic matter. The humus improves soil structure and releases plant nutrients to feed crops that follow in the rotation.

Agronomists emphasize that second crop alfalfa should be given a chance to establish a strong new top growth before it is pastured or cut for hay. These specialists recommend that fields should not be pastured after early September. This will enable the alfalfa plants to pack their roots with plant food reserves to carry them safely over the winter and spur healthy, early growth the following spring.

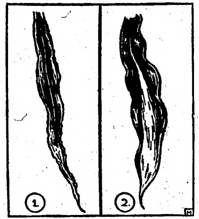
Watch Corn Plants For Hunger Signs From Now to Harvest

WATCH your corn fields for plant food hunger signs from now to harvest, advise Midwestern agronomists. Color and rate of growth are the principal clues. If the leaves are deep, dark, healthy green, you have nothing to worry about. But any other color means trouble.

Leaf No. 1 in the accompanying chart is starved for potash. The tip and edges look scorched. They lose potash first when there isn't enough for healthy growth. Potash hungry corn has weak roots and stalks. It lodges easily.

The crinkly, "fired" tip and midrib of Leaf No. 2 are signs of nitrogen hunger. Notice the inverted "V" running from the leaf tip along the midrib. This is yellowish and later will begin to dry and brown. "Firing" of corn leaves and stalks is usually blamed on drouth. But actually it is due to a lack of enough nitrogen. Drouth-thirsty corn leaves roll, wither and dry, but they still hold their green color.



When corn is starved for phosphate, the leaves have purple edges and tips. In severe cases, leaves may show signs of nitrogen hunger, too, because phosphate-starved corn cannot use the nitrogen it takes up.

Hunger signs in your corn fields mean that the soil is seriously low in plant nutrients. That, in turn, means low yields and poor quality. Best insurance against such yield-cutting hunger signs is a well-balanced supply of the three major plant nutrients—nitrogen, phosphate and potash. This can be supplied by commercial fertilizer carrying sufficient amounts of each element. Good tilth is another essential. Tilth can be built by including well-fertilized deep-rooted legumes regularly in the rotation. The legumes mellow the soil, improve its structure and add nitrogen and organic matter.

BY E. E. HALLERAN

THE STORY SO FAR: Dan Frazer is a government agent in the border town of Mesa Verde, on assignment to locate a hidden store of arms and munitions. Factions in town also are trying to do the same. Archie Scott, Frazer's predecessor in the investigation, was shot and killed just as he was going to tell Frazer where the munitions were. It is night, and Frazer catches Sally Chew when, thinking he is out, she enters his room to search it. She says that Deputy Ed Delaplane sent her to find some proof of Frazer's real identity. Next morning Frazer goes over to the Bartell store and finds it closed. He speaks to the old prospector whom he rescued from an attack.

CHAPTER XI

Frazer gave him a nod of appreciation and remarked, "Looks like you're going somewhere. Is that Bartell's rig?"

The old man frowned. "Seems like there's some argyment as to who's goin' where. The old boy's tryin' to send the gal away to some place they got out in the hills. She says she ain't goin', but he's kinda stubborn. Asked me to come down and harness up fer him."

"Going where?" Frazer asked quickly.

"I dunno, I reckon I'll drive fer 'em, but they ain't agreein' none too good on who's goin' or when."

Frazer studied the old fellow for a moment, then asked cautiously, "Did you hire out to Bartell?"

"You might say as how I did. He asked me to take on this chore, and I couldn't very well turn him down, seein' as how they was mighty white to me last night."

"Has Bartell told you about his pet scheme for taking over northern Sonora?"

There was honest astonishment on the weathered features, and Frazer knew that he had made a mistake in broaching the subject. "Sonora?" the old man repeated wonderingly. "What in ternation fire are yo' talkin' about?"

"Too much of it to explain," Frazer said shortly. "Bartell's backing a scheme that's due to turn this border country into a shambles. The men you were with in the saloon last night were trying to pump you for information about a shipment of guns that's supposed to be hidden near here."

Bartell Tries to Send Helen to the Mountains

"Whew! Sounds right excitin'. Well, they didn't git nothin' outa me. I'd swear there wasn't anything cached up there in them canyons. I been all through 'em and I didn't see no sign of anybody havin' been in there."

"Maybe that's what they wanted to know," Frazer told him dryly. "Now they won't have to search that part of the country. Anyway, it looks to me like Bartell's trying to get his daughter out of the country before the storm breaks. See that you take good care of her—and keep your eyes skinned for a little southpaw gunman. He might take a notion to heave some lead at her. If he turns up you better shoot first and ask questions afterward."

Ignoring the old prospector's amazed question he turned toward a back door and climbed a stairway which he had not seen on his previous visit. It was no time for ceremony, so he contented himself with a shout of greeting as he was halfway to the upper floor.

Derek Bartell met him in what appeared to be a sort of pantry, the man's dark face bleak and angry. Obviously he had been quarreling with his daughter, but there was more than mere anger in those fanatical eyes. The man was showing some of the fear which must have been growing upon him during the past twelve hours. For the first time he seemed to be recognizing the dread implications of the storm he had stirred up.

"Morning," Frazer greeted abruptly. "Sorry to intrude at such an hour, but I would like to speak to your daughter."

Bartell faltered, then spoke with an obvious effort at heartiness. "Come right along in. We never finished that talk we were having last evening."

"You left rather suddenly," Frazer reminded him.

"Sorry about that. Something important came up and I had to attend to it." He broke off shortly, still showing signs of uneasiness. It seemed clear that he did not intend to renew his earlier offer to employment, and Frazer wondered what had brought about the change. Had Chew or Kranz told him something to make him suspect this stranger in town.

Helen came into the room then, her appearance bringing evident relief to her father. Frazer saw that she had been angry, but it brought a sense of quick satisfaction that she should smile at sight of him. There did not seem to be any doubt that she was glad to see him—and he did not think the emotion was based purely on the reason she gave.

"You're just in time to be an ally," she greeted. "Father has been trying to pack me off into the mountains, and I don't propose to go."

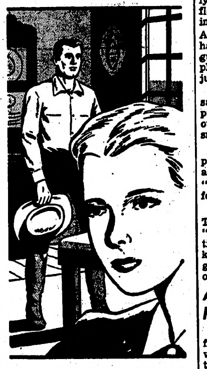
"But Mesa Verde is dangerous," Bartell said testily.

"I think your father is right," Frazer said quietly.

He mentally cursed the obligation which bound him to Mesa Verde. Offhand he could think of no prospect more pleasing than a trip to some remote mountain retreat with Helen Bartell. He tried to tell her so with his eyes and she came across the room toward him, her smile hinting that she had received the message and was well pleased by it.

Then she halted as though someone had struck her in the face. A disgusted frown supplanted the smile and she wrinkled her nose suggestively. "Please excuse my bothering you with such a personal matter," she said with something like cold fury in her tones. "I'm sure your interests elsewhere must be so great that you're being bored by all this."

Before the astonished Frazer could reply she was out of the room. He turned to face Derek Bartell's wry smile. "Now what was the meaning of that?" he wondered.



"I think your father is right," Frazer said. "After last night you can't doubt that someone believes it necessary to get rid of you."

Bartell seemed happy to be able to smile at the woes of someone else. "My daughter has a strong aversion to the perfume affected by a certain barmaid," he pronounced slowly. "I presume it reminds her that a very good friend of hers appeared here with the same distinct odor on him. At any rate you seem to have the same aroma about you."

"I should," Frazer said savagely. "The girl in question was in my room for at least a half hour last night—and very close to me for a part of that time."

Frazer Asks Return Of Scott's Revolver

Bartell frowned. "You admit it?"

"Sure. The huzzy tried to steal a gun from me and I caught her in the act. It seems your friend Chew was mighty anxious to find out who I was. Then Ed Delaplane wanted the gun I picked up in the alley last night. You wouldn't know anything about that, I suppose?"

Either the man was a very good actor—which Frazer doubted—or his surprise and perplexity were entirely genuine. "Of course I know nothing about it. Why should I?"

"Because somebody is mighty anxious about a gun. I don't think it's one of the guns I had. I think it must be the gun I gave to your daughter last night. That's what I came for this morning. Do you suppose I might stay here long enough to get it—if I stay out where the wind can blow on me?"

He was smiling broadly when he came back into the room, and Frazer realized that he was a pleasantly attractive man when the fanaticism and fear were both absent from his eyes. "She's going," he said abruptly. "I don't know whether to thank you or that rank scent, but something altered her stubborn attitude." He studied Frazer narrowly as though suddenly interested in this tall young fellow who had affected his daughter so strangely. "I'm not quite sure I understand her motives in the matter, but I won't argue. The important thing is that she's getting out of town.

"It must be the perfume," Frazer murmured, trying to keep his face from getting red. "I hope you'll put in a word of explanation for me. I don't want her to keep those wrong ideas."

Bartell's smile remained quizzical. "I will tell her about it—some time. But not until she's out of Mesa Verde. If it's the perfume business that was responsible for her agreeing to go I'm not going to risk another change of mind. She's a real woman in that respect—and stubborn, too."

Frazer grinned at the other's tone. "Is that the gun you're carrying?"

Bartell started. "I completely forgot I had it. Here." He handed it over, his glance becoming a little more keen. "What do you expect to learn from it?"

"I don't rightly know," Frazer told him. "It's just that somebody was mighty anxious to get hold of a gun from me last night. The ones I had didn't seem unusual in any way, so I figured it must be this one they wanted."

"I didn't see anything unusual about that one, either," Bartell commented.

Frazer studied the weapon briefly and knew the same sort of bafflement as had come to him on the inspection of the two other guns. Apparently Mesa Verde did not have much originality in its six-gun styles. This was one of those plain, cedar-butted Peacemakers, just like the other two.

"Maybe I guessed wrong," he said with a frown. "If I did I've pulled a real boner. I left those other two Colts where the first snooper could pick them up."

He started for the stairway, pausing only long enough to throw a parting remark at the stout man. "Don't forget to put in a good word for me."

"Later," Bartell said briefly. Then he nodded significantly, "You'd better try to see me some time today. I'd be interested to know how you make out with your gun puzzle." The last sentence was obviously an afterthought.

All Shells Removed From Mystery Guns

It was something of a surprise to find the six-guns still on the washstand. If Dan had not placed them so carefully he might have believed that no one had been near them during the interval since he had gone to breakfast. However, he had marked their positions carefully and he saw that both had been moved. Someone had been prompt in making a raid—but why had the guns been left?

The obvious answer was that neither of these weapons was the one in which someone had such a strong interest. That put the pressure squarely back upon the Colt which he had brought from Bartell's. It must be Archie Scott's gun that the searchers wanted.

A close inspection of the gun told him nothing. Evidently it was a weapon which Scott had procured locally and, although it was not new, it had been recently cleaned and oiled. So recently that Frazer knew the job must have been done by Helen Bartell. It threw an interesting sidelight on the girl's character. Not many girls would have thought to clean a fouled gun, particularly under such circumstances as had obtained during the previous evening.

He seemed to be up against a blank wall, but he knew that there must be an answer here. Having eliminated all possibilities but one, he suddenly found himself toying with an idea that seemed like a real hunch. He turned back to the other two Colts and opened them. There was not a single shell in either one.

That seemed to clinch the matter. He left all three weapons on the washstand and went out quickly, speaking to no one as he left the hotel, and strode grimly up the street toward Carson Emery's little box of an office.

Delaplane was there, talking to the marshal, and Frazer favored him with a dry grin. "Morning, gents," he greeted. "I want to lodge a complaint about somebody bustin' into my room at the hotel last night."

He sounded so aggrieved that Emery chuckled and Delaplane laughed aloud. Frazer looked pained and went on to explain his troubles, deliberately impersonating the rankest sort of tenderfoot. Emery heard him through in silence and rose to the occasion, sending Delaplane out to search for the man described by Frazer. The deputy went out, openly derisive.

As soon as the younger man was out of earshot the little marshal dropped his patient air. Squinting thoughtfully at his visitor he demanded, "What the hell's it all about? You don't have to act that dumb."

Frazer chuckled. "I hope I didn't overdo it. I wanted Delaplane to be convinced. The man who was in my room was the fellow who shot The Duke, I'm pretty certain. Not only that, but I'll know him for sure the next time I see him."

"Why didn't you say so?"

Leave your spring flowering bulbs undisturbed until the tops have turned yellow and died down. When cutting blooms, allow the plants to retain as much foliage as possible. Divide clumps of chrysanthemums, hardy asters and phlox. As they grow, pinch out the centers of the plants to make them bushy.

FIRST AID TO THE AILING HOUSE

BY ROGER C. WHITMAN

Question: Will you please tell me how I can finish a dining-room set in the new gray finish that is so popular? The grain has a little white tint to it.

Answer: Clean and smooth the wood by rubbing with fine sandpaper; then wipe with turpentine. The wood is then colored with a gray stain, used as directed on the label of the container. Finish with two coats of a top grade of quick-drying varnish. When the first coat is hard and dry, dull the gloss by rubbing lightly with very fine (00) sandpaper; then dust off and apply the finish coat. Experiment first on some odd pieces of board to get the right color and effect. Paint dealers handling a full line of wood finishing materials can supply the stain.

First Aid Kits Would Reduce Number of Fatal Farm Injuries

This is National Farm Safety Week. For several weeks home demonstration agents, county agricultural agents and others interested in agriculture have been working closely with farm groups and 4-H clubs in campaigns to emphasize the week and in planning ways to cut farm lossses. These programs have been conducted in home towns throughout the nation.

All this has been with the purpose of ending needless suffering and loss of life from farm accidents. Preventable accidents continue to kill thousands and injure hundreds of thousands of farm residents each year. Such accidents deprive the nation of needed manpower and destroy property vital to national defense.

The 1950 report on farm accidents revealed five frightening facts:

1. Total farm accidents were 15,500 in 1950. Injuries totaled about 1,300,000.
2. Farm home deaths totaled 3,900, with approximately 550,000 nonfatal accidents.
3. Motor vehicles killed 6,300 farm residents in 1950 and injured 220,000 more.
4. The total of farm work deaths was 4,300, which accounted for more than 25 per cent of the nation's occupational death toll for 1950.
5. Public non-motor vehicle deaths, such as drownings, took the lives of about 1,600 farm residents.

Since even one serious accident in a family can be expensive in money, time, and loss of labor, farm families as well as others may well give special attention to safety rules. Here are nine that have been publicized widely in recent weeks, possibly through local advertising by merchants who realize the importance of farm safety to the local community:

1. Keep passage ways and stairs in good repair, unobstructed and well lighted.
2. Keep ladders in good repair and easy to get at in emergencies.
3. Don't wear loose or floppy clothes around machinery, or when doing cooking or housework.
4. Keep your back straight and lift heavy loads with leg muscles. Don't try to lift anything that is too heavy for you.
5. Use the right tools for the job. Keep them in good condition. Keep them in a safe place.
6. Don't use kerosene to start fires.
7. Always stop a machine before starting to repair it. Disconnect electrical appliances or equipment before working on them.
8. Give prompt attention to even small injuries.
9. Never swim alone. Never dive into water without first determining the depth. Be careful around any boat. Never stand up in small boats.

Studies of accidents each year show how often these rules are overlooked.

Despite increased emphasis on safety by local newspapers and in advertising campaigns by Main Street merchants in the interest of their community and rural neighbors, there probably will be a substantial number of fatal farm accidents this year that would not result in death if adequate first-aid measures were taken. The same is true of disabilities resulting from accidents.

With this in mind, it would seem that the recently devised civil defense kit, designed by the federal civil defense administration for homes in critical target areas, would be ideal for the farm wife to keep on hand in case of emergency.

Packed in a suitable container for protection against dust and moisture, they could be kept handy in the farm home in case of any emergency. By having the kit packed and ready, it can be taken to the scene of an accident on the farm on short notice. Time wasted looking for proper first aid material is thus eliminated.

1. One 3 to 6-ounce bottle of antiseptic solution, such as benzalkonium chloride aqueous solution 1: 1,000, to be used on open wounds, but not burns.
2. One 1 to 2-ounce bottle of aromatic spirits of ammonia to be used either internally or by inhalation for fainting or near collapse.
3. One 8 to 10-ounce can of sodium bicarbonate, USP (baking soda, which is a protection against nerve gas). Add four level teaspoons to one quart of water and use to wash parts of body exposed to nerve gas, or saturate a cloth with this solution and use as a face mask for protection against inhalation.
4. Four triangular, compressed, muslin bandages (37x37x52 inches) folded with two safety pins each. These may be used as slings, or bandage coverings.
5. Two large and two small bath towels and one bed sheet. Bath towels and bed sheets may be used as improvised bandages and dressings. They should be relaundered every three months and packaged in heavy paper. Old, soft towels are preferable. When towels are used for burn dressings, place dressing and fasten down with triangular bandage or strip of sheet.
6. Two packages each of medium (8x7½ inches) and small (4x7 inches) first-aid dressings.
7. Package of twenty-five to fifty paper envelope drinking cups.
8. Half to one-oz. bottle of castor oil, USP, for emergency eye drops. Other bland eye drops suitable for painful irritations of the eye may be used.
9. A flashlight with extra batteries.
10. Ten to fifteen medium (1½-inch long) safety pins.
11. Two or three single-edge razor blades.
12. Bottle of 100 to 200 salt and soda tablets. Salt and soda tablets in these sizes may be used as an aid in reducing shock after burns or injuries by adding six tablets to one quart of water and having the victim drink as much of the solution as possible. A teaspoonful of common table salt and a half teaspoonful of baking soda in one quart of water will serve the same purpose.
13. One or two cakes of toilet soap.
14. Two or three splints one-eighth to one-quarter inch thick by 3½ inches wide by 12 to 15 inches long.
15. Twelve to fifteen wooden tongue blades.
16. Bottle of 100 water purification tablets (halazone or iodine compound).

The ready availability within the home of the above list of suggested first-aid supplies is a wise precautionary move not only for civil defense, but in the event of an accident or a catastrophe within the home.

THE CHILD CITY

Mooseheart Educational Plan Is 50 Years Ahead of Times

The Mooseheart, Illinois, educational program is 50 years ahead of the times, according to one of the nation's most prominent educators and school administrators, Dr. Herold C. Hunt, superintendent of the Chicago public schools.

Dr. Hunt recently stated that in all probability children will start to school when they are three years old—by the year 2000. For the past decade, the residents of the Loyal Order of Moose "Child City" have been enrolling in the community's nursery school at that age.

After two years in nursery school, the Moose wards "graduate" to kindergarten with all the frill and furbelows, scholastic ratings and achievement tests of a high school or college commencement.

The nearly 1,000 residents of this unusual "Child City" are dependent sons and daughters of Moose members. The community is a city complete in every detail, having its own postoffice, bank, department stores, barber shop, beauty shop, fire department, theater, a "children's cathedral", grocery, meat store, garage, filling station, and farm. Mooseheart even has its own railroad, a $5,000 scale model which serves to teach the seniors railroading, electronics and allied subjects.

Nursery Has Graduation Exercises

The children have their class play, prom, baccalaureate services, valedictorian, salutatorian, commencement speaker, and presentation of diplomas.

It is always a thrilling sight to see these five-year-olds, attired in their traditional white caps and gowns, seriously going about the business of graduating into kindergarten. The little boys even have the privilege of selecting their favorite little girl to whom they will present their "bids" for the miniature prom.

Specially engraved diplomas are treasured by the tots' mothers, if they are also residents of Mooseheart, and by the Moose lodges from whose jurisdiction they enter the home and school if they are double orphans.

The 1,000 residents of this community are supported through the efforts of the Loyal Order of Moose organization.

Plastics Ancient

Plastics are generally considered rather new, but their use goes back well over 100 years. First there was the use of natural resins, gums, shellac, and ceiling-wax. In 1846 cellulose nitrate began to be produced. Progress has been steady in the past century until now, if this were not known as the Atomic Age, it might well be called the Plastics Age. Today's plastic spectacle frames, with their rich variety of styles and colors, are a good example of why plastics are popular.

Moss Menace

Lack of fertility, poor drainage or both cause moss in some lawns. Fertility deficiency is corrected by raking away the moss and fertilizing the bared spots liberally with a special lawn food. Where water gathers because of faulty drainage, this moss-causing factor can be ended by changing the grade. If surface drainage is good but seepage water saturates the subsoil it may be necessary to install tile to end the difficulty.

Cleaning Brushes

The painter who neglects to clean his brushes after they've been used doesn't deserve much sympathy; but at least he deserves a tip on how to recondition his brushes the next time they have to be used. Fill up an old can with vinegar, stick the brushes in it, and put it on the stove until it boils for ten or fifteen minutes. This may cause falling bristles in inferior quality brushes; but it will soften them up considerably, and a good washing should complete the reconditioning.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

What's So Funny?

Just finished reading a magazine article that "proves" you and I don't know what's funny.

A bunch of psychologists came to this sad conclusion after telling jokes to college students. Very often they would give out with what they considered a side-splitter—and not get even a chuckle in response. Other times the students would laugh their heads off at stories that weren't considered really funny.

Maybe I'm wrong, but what makes a psychologist such a better judge of humor than the rest of us? If a man gets a kick out of a joke that proves it was funny to Him—doesn't it?

From where I sit, when psychologists try to set up a standard for a sense of humor they're getting too serious for me. Stands to reason that different people laugh at different things, just as they have different tastes for most everything. I'm partial to a glass of beer with meals myself—but I promise not to make any "wisecracks" if you prefer tea.

A superior meat and wool animal, the new breed of sheep—the Columbia—is gaining popularity in Great Northern territory. Instrumental in introduction of the Columbia breed along Great Northern was the railway's Department of Agricultural and Mineral Development. Above are two prize-winners at a recent Columbia Show and Sale in Minot, N. D. The man standing at the right is E. M. (Pop) Gregory of Fargo, Great Northern agricultural agent.

BEHIND THE MAN ON THE LAND

Beyond providing transportation services, what does a railway do for farmers and ranchers in its territory?

Part of the answer is fairly common knowledge: a railway pays taxes. Great Northern's 1950 tax bill in the ten states it serves was a whopping $11½ million dollars—more than 5 out of every 100 dollars the railway received for transportation services last year.

In many of those states almost 50 per cent of the railway's tax dollar goes to support rural and other public schools. Another sizable chunk helps build and maintain roads used by farmers, ranchers and railways' competitors.

The railway's local payroll and purchases mean a great deal, too, to you who make your living on the land. Yet, a most important part of the railway's service generally is overlooked. It is the every day contribution to every community along the railway by Great Northern's Department of Agricultural and Mineral Development.

Behind the man on the land in Great Northern's territory is a small, but highly-trained and experienced group of men devoted to better, more productive agriculture and development of other natural resources—a service no other kind of transportation performs.

It is what Great Northern does to help you get bigger yields per acre at less cost. To raise crops and livestock that will bring greater returns. To find new markets for what you raise.

Independently, or in association with colleges, universities and government agencies, Great Northern encourages farming methods best adapted to conditions in your region. It helps you wage war on plant diseases, droughts, weeds and other adversities.

At a cost of $130,000 a year Great Northern maintains a staff of agricultural and mineral development experts whose sole job is to help you.

For the transportation of what you produce, Great Northern must compete with other public transport enterprises that are distinctly favored with direct and indirect government subsidies, and exempted from comparable regulation and taxation.

But, the railway has no competition from other forms of transportation in the constructive business of helping you—the man on the land!

SUMMER-SEEDED legumes and grasses often make better stands than earlier seedings with nurse or companion crops, reports the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee.

Many Midwestern farmers say that competition from the nurse crop weakens the seedlings, making them vulnerable to midsummer drouth.

Alfalfa, clovers and all types of legume-grass mixtures are well suited to summer seeding.

One of the big advantages is that weed competition is eliminated during the hot summer months when the soil is comparatively dry. Weed seed requires more moisture for germination than does legume and grass seed.

Agronomists recommend late July through mid-August as a good time to seed the legumes. A firm seed bed helps guard against planting the seed too deep.

Getting the seed in the ground isn't the whole story, though. You have to feed the soil so it can feed the crop. At planting time, summer-seeded legume grass mixtures need a complete fertilizer carrying nitrogen, phosphate and potash, plus calcium and magnesium. Then the plants will develop a strong crop-feeding root system and you will get thicker, leafier top growth. The legumes need lots of phosphate and potash. You can provide this after they are established by top-dressing with commercial fertilizer carrying these nutrients.

40th Anniversary This Week

Forty years ago the first issue of the "Northern Light" was published in Holt which was later changed in name to The Holt Weekly News. Chas. W. Latta, who came here from Crookston, was the publisher.

Holt was at that time enjoying a boom as the Mud Lake territory was thrown open for homesteading and hundreds of people visited this area.

Some of the news items from the issue were:

Ludvig Monson and Oscar Knutson went to Langdon, N. D. to work in harvest fields.

S. S. Kolden, Ed Ellingson and and Erick Knudson went to Fargo to bring back a threshing rig they purchased.

Nels Engebretson was the first subscriber.

Holt won a ball game, 17 to 6 played at Humboldt. During the first three innings Humboldt had the best of it and then Holt began stealing bases. They stole all the bases several times and might have swiped the diamond is they hadn't had a better one at home.

BY E. E. HALLERAN

THE STORY SO FAR: It seems to Dan Frazer that almost everybody in Mesa Verde is trying to steal revolvers from him — guns which he had taken from three different men on three occasions. One of the men was Archie Scott, killed just as he was about to tell Frazer where a store of guns and ammunition is hidden. Frazer goes to Bartell's store where he finds that Derek Bartell is trying to persuade his daughter, Helen, that she should leave town for her own safety. She agrees to go to their house in the hills. Before she leaves she returns to Frazer the pistol he took from the body of Archie Scott, slain government agent who knew the location of a vital arms cache.

CHAPTER XII

"I don't want him arrested. I've got a hunch he might lead us to something. Anyway, I didn't come to see you about that. I've got another lead and I wanted to talk it over with you." He went on to detail the strange events of the night together with his troubles over the three Colts. Then he suddenly asked, "Can you see any reason why anybody should try so hard to get hold of one of those guns?"

Emery's frown deepened. "After that last item you mentioned it looks to me like they wanted shells instead of guns."

"That's the way I look at it. Now tell me why."

"How come you think I know the answer?"

"I don't. I was just hoping you might come up with the same idea I did. It would make me feel a little more sure of myself."

Emery seemed a little annoyed. "I don't see any point to it all. You tell me."

"All right. Maybe you'll remember that I told you about what Scott said just before he died. Just two words. The bullet. At the time I thought he was talking about the slug that had hit him. Now I think he was carrying a bullet in his gun that was a dummy, a container for some message which he didn't dare carry openly."

"Could be, I've heard o' somethin' like that bein' done. Now what does it mean?"

Frazer Believes Scott Hid Message in Shell

"It could work out like this. Scott knew he was likely to be killed before he could report. So he wrote down the one important bit of information he had on a scrap of paper and put it in a shell from which he'd pulled the powder. Somebody else knew about it, and they've been tryin' to get that dummy shell."

"What information? And who's tryin' to get it?"

"I'm guessing that the information is the location of Bartell's munitions cache. I can't think of anything else that Scott would have been so careful about—or that other people would have been so anxious to get."

"Sounds reasonable. Now who's after it?"

"Ed Delaplane is certainly one lad who's plenty interested. I don't know whether he's on his own or whether he's acting for somebody else, but he tried twice. Then came the little southpaw. If he ties up with Ed we've got something of an answer. If they're not working together it'll look like a new complication that I can't quite understand."

"Which one of 'em do you figure got it when they took the shells outa the guns this mornin'?"

"Neither. Whoever raided my room last was in a hurry. He—or she—just took the shells and got away, not taking time to see whether they were getting loaded ammunition or the dummy shell that all the fuss is about. Actually, neither of those guns was the one Scott had carried. Scott's gun was in the possession of Miss Bartell all the time."

"Then you got the cartridge?"

"No. When I got the gun back it was reloaded with fresh shells."

"Then why in hell don't you get there and find out what she did with the old ones?'

Frazer grinned. "I'm kinda unwelcome around there just now and I wanted to talk it over with you before I took the plunge. No point in gettin my nose pulled if my idea doesn't hold water."

"I think you've got a hunch," Emery snapped excitedly. "Trot on up there and see what luck you have. This ain't no time to git bashful."

Frazer nodded and started for the door, but before he could reach it there was the sound of a rider pounding hard into town from the south. Across the street from the marshal's office a man shouted something into a side street and broke into a run, heading toward the hotel. Another man went past at a gallop and Frazer saw that a number of others were converging on the point where a dusty rider had halted.

Emery hurried forward, staring through the front window at the scene of excitement. "That's young Higgins," he said wonderingly. "Works for the copper people. Last I heard of him he was over in Mexico, handlin' some job connected with the new mines they're gettin' ready to open in the Sierra Madre foothills."

"Then the pot's open," Frazer grimaced. "He's brought some kind of bad news, that's sure. And judging by the way all those gents ran to meet him they must have been expecting it."

Emery reached for his hat but changed his mind and perched on a corner of the desk where he could watch the street. "We'll hold up a bit. Delaplane just shoved into the crowd. He'll come along and tell us what's up. It might be better if we don't show ourselves just yet."

They did not have long to wait. The deputy came down the street at a run, something in his expression telling Frazer that he was more excited than pleased at the news. Apparently the break had not been forced by his party, whatever gang that might be.

"Yaquis are on the warpath," he announced abruptly as he came in. "Higgins says they ambushed a couple of mine wagons early this mornin'. Killed two men. The Rurales are makin' a big show of huntin' for the killers, but they don't seem to be gettin' anywhere. Like most o' the other jobs down there, I reckon. All fuss and no results."

Emery regarded him dourly. "You sound like you been listen' to Derek Bartell. That's his line o' chatter, always tryin' to make it sound like we gotta bust across the line and run things for 'em."

Delaplane flushed angrily but did not reply. Emery followed up his brief advantage. "Better get this straight, Ed. Your job is to keep things on the level here in town. We ain't interested in nobody's schemes below the border. If this is a signal for trouble—as I figure it is—we're keepin' clear. Understand?"

The crowd was still milling excitedly around young Higgins when Frazer went out into the street and turned toward Bartell's store. He passed several other hurrying citizens, but none of them seemed to pay any attention to him as they went by. Obviously they had eyes only for that ominous gathering in front of the hotel.

The Dark-Haired Girl Reappears on Street

He saw no one with whom he had a speaking acquaintance until he was approaching the Bartell place. Then he realized a pretty, dark-haired girl was standing at the door of the eating house next door. Although he had not seen her in daylight before he felt certain that it was the same girl who had been there the previous evening and had witnessed the shooting of Vince Gale. He also recalled that the wiry little Mexican had gone into her place—although it had been in complete darkness. The memory made him cautious. Like everyone else in Mesa Verde, she seemed to have more of an interest in the maze of plotting than she would probably admit.

She greeted him with a quick smile. "You return too late," she said, the slight accent adding a charm to her well modulated tones. "Miss Bartell has left."

He forced an answering smile. "Who said I was looking for Miss Bartell?"

"My eyes tell me much. It is early, but you are here for the second time today. Men become most diligent when the lady is pretty."

He found both the back door and the stable door closed and locked. The back door lock was a simple one, however, and he did not hesitate to pick it. There was little chance of Bartell coming back for some minutes yet, and it was becoming increasingly important to know as much as possible. If Archie Scott's bullet would supply information he had to take immediate steps to find it.

He tried the kitchen and pantry first, but had no success in either and went on into the living room where he had been on the previous evening. There was a gun cabinet in a corner behind the far door, and Frazer moved quickly toward it. This looked like a good bet.

The first drawer he opened was the right one. In it were all the necessary paraphernalia for taking care of firearms, including several boxes of assorted ammunition. A box of forty-five cartridges showed five missing shells. That would be the five fresh loads in the Scott gun. Now what would Helen have done with the cartridges she took out of the weapon? Not all of them were empties, so it wasn't likely that she would have thrown them away.

He considered it for a moment, then reached for a second, and older looking box of forty-fives. This time he found what he wanted. There were several kinds of tarnished shells in the box, but only one was a forty-five. He picked it up quickly, recalling that there had been four empty cases and a fifth cartridge in the gun—according to his figuring.

A hasty examination of the cartridge told him nothing. It seemed to be an ordinary shell, properly loaded and almost as shiny as the new loads which Helen Bartell had put in the gun. Certainly it showed no indication of having been taken apart.

Long Sought Message Mystifying to Frazer

Then a thought struck him. Maybe Scott had used the dummy as a load to go under the hammer instead of keeping an empty chamber in that position. Perhaps Helen Bartell had spotted the dead load and had done something with it. In that case he still had a search to make. Had she thrown it out with the empties or kept it aside? If it had been thrown out, where had she thrown it?

The answer came with a suddenness that made him grin. He was out of the room in two strides, searching the kitchen with a hasty glance. A tin bucket fitted with a lid was behind the door and he nearly jumped for it, grinning again as he yanked off the lid and smelled the sour reek of day old garbage.

He carried the container to the kitchen sink and tipped it a little, paying among the coffee grounds and scraps until his fingers struck something hard. He came up with three empty cases before he located the one he wanted. In appearance it was just another forty-five shell, but he saw at once that the primer had been dented. Evidently Scott had used a dead case or had deliberately exploded the primer for safety's sake.

He delayed only long enough to replace the garbage can and wash his hands. Then he wrenched the bullet out of the case and shook a tightly rolled slip of paper into the palm of his hand. His fingers were trembling a little as he unrolled it, but his spirits fell with a thud as the pencil writing came into view. There were just three words on the paper, three Spanish words. El Oso Pequeno.

He did not delay while he swore. Slipping the paper into one pocket and the shell into another he headed for the stairway, a sense of frustration heavy upon him. What in the name of peace did Scott mean by that? El Oso Pequeno. The Little Bear. Had the man gone in for astrology or was he talking in terms of nursery stories?

Dan was so disgusted that he did not bother to scout the rear of the building before going out of the door. That was a tactical error, for he stepped out into the yard to find himself the center of interest for two people. At the back of the adjacent restaurant the pretty brunette was talking earnestly with the wiry Mexican who had been with Emil Kranz. Both of them stared in some surprise at the sight of Frazer coming out of the Bartell building.

Daylight burglary had its bad moments, Dan decided. The embarrassment was so confounded complete in case of detection. He knew that the color had mounted to his neck, but he managed a casual word of greeting as he nodded toward the pair. "I reckon I won't bother to wait any longer for Mr. Bartell. Maybe I can run across him around town somewhere." He hoped he sounded cooler than he felt.

The Mexican simply stared, but the girl smiled. Her expressive countenance made her thoughts clear and Frazer felt a little better. He could see the suspicion in her eyes fade as she looked him over, the smile indicating that she was taking him for what he pretended to be. "Senor Bartell should be at the hotel," she said helpfully. "There is news in Mesa Verde to interest him this morning."

National Vegetable Week Will Produce Food Budget Hints

In these days of high prices the food budget of every family is of the utmost importance. Home town housewives are constantly in search of food items and ideas that will provide better nutrition and not wreck the family's budget. For this reason, National Vegetable Week (August 11-15) will prove to be of greater interest to home towners this year than ever before.

National Vegetable Week was originally designed to provide accurate information to consumers, and to increase demand for vegetables in every major market and home in a period of heavy supply. This message was adequately presented during National Vegetable Week 1950.

At the same time, the average housewife learned more about the importance of vitamins, energy and health building values of vegetables; she learned new recipes for preparing vegetables; and she learned some of the industry's problems of marketing, packaging and transportation.

In other words, while the vegetable growers of the nation were telling the story of the industry and its importance upon national economy, the housewife was learning a number of facts that meant better living for her family.

With this thought in mind, the average housewife can watch her local newspaper during the week of August 11-15 this year and take full advantage of vegetable bargains, recipes, and nutrition hints that will be presented by the Main Street merchant in cooperation with vegetable growers and allied industries.

Here again is an opportunity for the Main Street merchant to be of service to his community.

There are hundreds of home towns throughout the country located in the center of great vegetable growing areas. Their economy is geared directly to production of potatoes, onions, beets, beans, lettuce, or whatever vegetable is the specialty of the area. To these communities National Vegetable Week is the time to tell their story to the world.

In these communities local newspapers, merchants and co-ops will join in a promotion campaign that deserves the attention of the entire public.

National Vegetable Week last year is believed to have produced the following 12 results:

1. Gained strong national recognition for the vegetable growers association through support of newspapers, magazines, radio, television and other media.
2. Increased consumption of vegetables.
3. Helped to maintain price levels.
4. Absence of oversupply reported to have reduced to a minimum waste and loss in markets.
5. Gave hotels, restaurants, and institutions new opportunities for increasing interest and animation in vegetables and created menu challenges.
6. Stimulated consumer interest in vegetables.
7. Aroused forward-looking vegetable growers, local and state associations, and gave new basis for pushing vegetables association membership campaigns.
8. Gave related industry an opportunity to get acquainted with a growing and friendly national agricultural association.
9. Emphasized the interest in research in production, packaging, marketing, and preparing vegetable dishes.
10. Provided new material for news outlets giving basis for continuing publicity on the vegetable business.
11. Firmly established fact that a self-helping program in agriculture can be successful, thus helping to preserve our free enterprise system.
12. Proves that an organized self-help program begets cooperation and support.

Jeannie's Summer Salad

Jean Patchett, America's top cover girl and first American Vegetable Queen uses everything available in fresh vegetables, chopped finely, except the tomatoes which are cut from bottom to stem in 8 segments. The sauce is an appetizing combination of:

1 cup chili sauce
1 cup mayonnaise
2 diced hard boiled eggs
6 chopped stuffed olves
salt and pepper to taste

Mix thoroughly and chill well. To serve, place leaf lettuce nest on small dish. Place four saltines on top edges of lettuce. Put ample serving of chopped vegetables over crackers. Add sauce, topped with crumpled roquefort cheese.

To make more interesting, a little girl's face can be easily made on top of the salad by using 2 stuffed olive slices for eyes, a sliver of pickle for the nose, and a split radish for the mouth.

Canned Tomato Juice Observes 21st Birthday

Canned tomato juice, which first hit the mass market back in 1931, is now the lustiest youngster of the entire vegetable juice field.

The figures show that tomato juice has been packed for the past 10 years at the equivalent rate of about 630,000,000 number two cans per year, as compared with a yearly pack average of about 240,000,000 cans during the 1930's.

Used primarily for babies and invalids in the 1920's, tomato juice was first canned on a mass production basis in 1931 after can company researchers solved problems of regaining original flavor and natural high vitamin count. This was followed by agronomy work with growers and canners to develop new seed strains and insure use of only best grade tomatoes for juice.

The result is, the statistics show, that tomato juice now demands almost as many containers annually as canned whole tomatoes. The product is also credited with being largely responsible for virtually doubling the annual tomato production of the United States.

FARM FASHION SHOW

"How you gonna keep 'em down on the farm, after they've seen Paree?"

That's exactly what Hess is doing with his caravan of fashions—taking the latest fashions to the farms of Pennsylvania and New Jersey. With the increased cost of transportation and the limited time which the farmer and his family have for shopping in town, this service means not only a saving in time, but money as well.

Aside from these aspects the interest that a fashion caravan of this kind brings to a community is tremendous. When the summer edition of the Hess caravan made a stop recently at the farm of Horace Kirby of Macungie, Pa., a large part of the rural population turned out to see the event. What they saw will not be forgotten soon.

Out of one of the station wagons piled five attractive mannequins, and disappeared into one of the trailers wherein the costume changes were made. A runway, from the trailer was soon set up as well as a microphone, over which Mr. Hess talked about fashion highlights, as the models paraded up and down the runway. Presenting a complete summer wardrobe from bathing suits and play clothes to summer dresses and evening gowns, Mr. and Mrs. Farmer and their family were given a complete preview of fashion for the summer.

Although no attempt was made on the tour to sell anything to the public, Hess believes it's good psychology for men to see how their wives spend money for clothes. He believes the tours create good will for his store and many of the clothes shown will finally find their way into the homes of the people who have seen them.

And so now the department store goes to the customer on the farm. And most merchandisers believe that Hess has a wonderful idea. It may be that the idea will spread into the west where distances made shopping trips to town few and far between for the average farmer.

Mrs. Kirby Liked the Fashion Show

Mrs. Kirby liked the fashion show. "We certainly appreciate this service," she said. "It's a grand way to shop and I'm sure that Mr. Kirby, who seldom gets to town, got just as much kick out of it as I did. Do you know he wants me to get that lilac coat which the pretty red headed model wore? Of course, I don't know if it will look as well on me—but he thinks it will, and that's enough for me."

Mr. Kirby wasn't the only man interested in the show. Many husbands expressed their likes and dislikes immediately. Hess believes this will eliminate returns and exchanges of garments. It often happens that when 'missus goes-a-shopping' and husband takes a dislike to what she has bought, the garment is returned immediately.

SPORTSMAN'S HORIZON

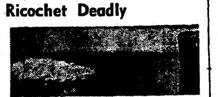
Ricochet Deadly



Bullet is hidden by splash as it almost goes under.

Science cautions shooters against firing rifles where bullets may ricochet off water or stone, warning that such bouncing bullets lose very little of their velocity and will carry almost as far as a direct shot.

Facts to support the warning were established by scientific tests made at the nation's foremost ballistics laboratories. The tests were damatically documented by super high-speed photographs taken at 2/1,000,000ths of a second.

The tests conducted in the interest of safe shooting by experts at the research and development laboratories of Olin Industries' Western Cartridge Company of East Alton, Illinois, show that a Super-X 22 caliber long rifle bullet has a velocity of 1,240 feet per second at 13 feet from the muzzle.

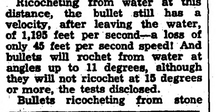
Ricocheting from water at this distance, the bullet still has a velocity, after leaving the water, of 1,195 feet per second—a loss of only 45 feet per second speed! And bullets will rochet from water at angles up to 11 degrees, although they will not ricochet at 15 degrees or more, the tests disclosed.

Bullets ricocheting from stone also lost little velocity and were deformed and upset so that they would cause severe wounds.



With practically no loss of velocity, bullet leaves water on its deflected course.

Cubes of gelatin, backed up by blocks of wood, caught the bullets after they ricocheted, and it was noted that penetrations were almost as deep as those of bullets fired directly into the blocks. The upset bullets which ricocheted off stone did not go so deep, but instead plowed wide channels.

Rifle experts who have warned of the danger of shooting at water or stone now have the scientific data to back up their warnings.

Praise for DU

Canada's prairies, while home to the continent's waterfowl, has an even larger stake in the democratic nation's economy. The prairies produce much of the world's wheat, rivaled only by that produced in Russia's Ukraine, and to a lesser extent, in our mid-west states. The source of all this economic wealth is inevitably tied to waterfowl, for the same ingredients—water and prairie land—are what produces both. Thus sportsmen of the United States, out to produce waterfowl for hunters, have aided the economic recovery of a nation.

Ducks Unlimited has been officially recognized and praised for the role it has played in nearly every corner where water conservation is of primary interest. The water stabilization committee of Alberta recently issued a report showing the work it has done since 1947. Recognition of DU importance in the work is illustrated by its membership on the committee, appointed by the provincial government, consisting of engineers from the government and Ducks Unlimited.

The objective of the committee is the conservation of water, the objective of DU is the conservation of waterfowl. With their objectives so closely knit, the two have provided a model of cooperation. When propagation of wild fowl is the main purpose of a project, Ducks Unlimited pays two-thirds of the cost and the Province one-third. When the major benefits accrue to the people of Alberta as a whole then the distribution of cost is reversed. On one lake where thousands of waterfowl nest, the Province provided $140,000 of the cost as against DU's $10,000.

Use The Reel

Although one can successfully land the average fish caught on a fly-rod by using the line, it is both smart and good insurance to use the reel when playing a really good-sized fish. When the slack is taken up, you can let the fish take line directly from the reel, which will mean that the tension is kept uniform and there is no danger of too much snubbing, as might be the case in hand-playing, and thus losing the fish.

Railroad Safety

During the year 1947 there were fewer fatalities on United States railroads than in any other year on record. The previous low in that respect was in 1939 when traffic, measured in ton-miles and passenger-miles, was only one-half as great as in 1947. Nonfatal injuries, on the other hand, were considerably greater than the 1939 total, though not so numerous as in the war years, when freight and passenger traffic was at peak levels. Comparing 1947 with 1946, total fatalities to all classes of persons numbered 4,186, a reduction of 176 or 4.0 per cent under 1946. Nonfatal injuries numbered 48,780 in 1947, a reduction of 3,227 or 63.2 per cent under 1946.

SIGVALD OYEN, Montevideo lawyer and county attorney of Chippewa County, has little trouble keeping busy. On top of professional duties, he's active in scouting, church and civic work. Yet he finds time to keep informed on the news. Asked about the future of Minnesota iron mining, he said: "Good, if the low-grade ores are developed . . . but the best ores are getting scarce." Quite a few people share this view, according to a statewide public opinion survey of 2,881 other representative Minnesotans.

Why do some people think Minnesota's iron mining industry is dying?

SURVEY FINDINGS:

11% of Minnesota citizens blame reduced reserves of high-grade ore . . . others fear foreign competition—but the great majority agree the Range can have a long, bright future.

See what you think about the future of Minnesota's iron mining industry . . . an industry that means much to every worker, businessman and farmer in the state. Here are the facts . . .

Ore shortage? In half a century 1.9 billion tons of Minnesota iron ore have been mined and shipped. About a billion tons remain. If there were nothing else, these ores would not last long. But that's the dark side of the picture.

Ore abundance? If the "cream" of Minnesota ores is getting thin, there's still plenty of "milk"—the untold, almost untapped, amounts of low-grade and taconite ores. These aren't usable "as is" in a blast furnace. But even taconite can be made into good ore by a manufacturing process. If this proves practical, you'll never see an ore shortage in Minnesota (and neither will your children or their children).

Competition? Whether it's practical to process lean ores and taconite hinges upon whether they can compete with ores from other areas. It's a cost question: though taconite, for instance, requires very extensive treatment, it must be produced as cheaply as high-grade foreign ores requiring no treatment, and manufactured ores from other states. In fact all our ores—high-grade, low-grade and taconite—must be competitive if any steel mill is to use them.

The answer? The key to the future is cooperation between the people of the state and the iron mining industry. The industry, for its part, must put up the capital, do the experimenting and furnish the skills. The people, for their part, must assure the industry the same fair treatment given to other Minnesota industries. Cooperation like this would be good news, not just for the range country but for all Minnesota . . . not just for mining employees but for everybody.

Tight Rope

By Allison L. Burks

Nurse Carol and Stella Moore, pretending to be Dorinda LaCroix at the insistence of Edward Thorndyke, who is paying her for the role, return to the Thorndyke home after learning that Fay Thorndyke, Edward's cousin and in on the conspiracy, is dead and has left a note of confession and suicide. They go to the kitchen where Carol offers to pour a cocktail for Stella. Just as Stella is about to take the drink, Sheriff Poole enters with Cleve Adams. At the same time he announces that he has come to arrest the murderer of Anne Delahay. He explains how the killer's schemes were developed and that Stella was to be next. The case is on the verge of solution. Stella is startled by Poole's words.

CHAPTER XXI

"It seems that Carol had been indulging in a minor form of blackmail, threatening to expose some irregularity of which Miss Hastings had been guilty at the hospital if she wouldn't co-operate. Of course the woman had no inkling that there was any serious crime involved. I didn't ask her what she had done at the hospital—none of my business—but Carol had lost her alibi. She didn't get into Los Angeles until around eight o'clock the night Anne Delahay was killed.

"Miss Hastings, once she let loose, gave me quite a lot of information about her supposed girl friend. She had no love for the young lady. The most important thing so far as I was concerned was that Carol's half brother had a hamburger stand somewhere down this way. When I heard his name, I knew where he was and I thought the question of how she got back to Thorndyke House and away again was answered. She simply got off the train at the station stop half a mile away from her brother's eating place and he furnished transportation.

"It was the brother, of course, who made the telephone call which took Carrie and Greer away from the house the day of Anne's death. Carol had laid her plans carefully. She knew that Miss LaCroix was down at the beach practically every sunny afternoon. However, if she'd missed her that day, she could always try again. It seems she was in the habit of meeting Edward away from the house and on those occasions she wore a wig of yellow hair so no one catching a glimpse of her would recognize her. She wore it that day for the same reason. It was just luck that the grocery boy saw her."

Typed Signature Was Not by Fay

Poole stopped as if his story was finished. He glanced down at the watch strapped about his muscular wrist, seemed to calculate the time, put his feet on the floor, rustled the papers on his desk importantly and assumed an air of dismissal.

"Don't stall, Poole, you know that isn't all," Cleve ordered inflexibly.

"In any event, I couldn't have prevented what happened to Fay Thorndyke — it was murder, not suicide, as you know. I didn't get back here until late Friday night. I expected to present my evidence at the inquest Saturday and obtain an order for Carol's arrest. But Fay's death made it necessary to postpone the inquest.

"That fake suicide and confession didn't take me in for a minute. It was simply impossible. She couldn't have been the woman at The Silver Slipper—which wasn't mentioned in the note, by the way—or the woman who was seen in the road the day Anne Delahay died. Remember that woman was described as rather under medium height—about Miss Dorinda's size. Nobody could possibly describe Fay as anything but tall or mistake her, even though her face was hidden, for Miss LaCroix. And she had an ironclad alibi for the second murder.

"The note was entirely typewritten, even the signature. It was typed on Fay's typewriter but anyone could have written it. I fancied, and found out later I was right, that there'd been a switch in the mild sedative tablets Miss Thorndyke was accustomed to taking. Morphine tablets had been substituted, we know now, which were again changed for the harmless ones when the note was planted.

"Fay had to die because she knew of the impersonation. It's barely possible Edward could have persuaded her to keep quiet if he had married her. But she certainly would have told everything she knew once she discovered his alliance with Carol. Her death that night, coming as it did so soon after Dorinda's escape, served a double purpose. It got Fay out of the way and created a scapegoat, we were supposed to accept what the note said and forget the whole thing. But by now, the strain was telling on Carol; her set-up for Fay wasn't as careful as the others had been."

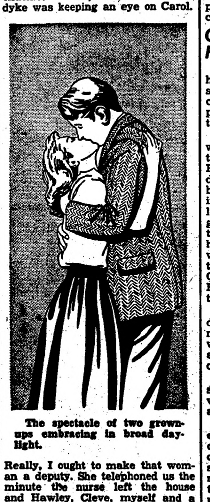
"But about that attempt on me," Dorinda broke in. "Fay was dead then—Carol couldn't have thought she'd get away with that. And how did you happen to be there just at the right time?"

Poole rubbed his hand over his chin without meeting Dorinda's eyes. "That wasn't just a happenstance. You see, I felt sure she'd make another immediate attack on you before you could tell things she didn't want told. I'll wager she found out you'd kept quiet about this Dorinda LaCroix stuff, didn't she?"

Dorinda nodded.

"I thought so. We didn't know what she planned to do but whatever it was we wanted to catch her in the act. That suicide note of Miss Thorndyke's complicated things. In spite of hell and high water, a good defending attorney might make a jury accept it. We arranged to give her a little rope and sure enough she tangled herself up in it."

He added hastily, "Cleve's bawled me out for this. He didn't know until after we were hidden in the house what it was all about. But you weren't in danger for a minute. You remember the man on the motorcycle? He was one of our men and he was watching at your end of the line. And at Thorndyke House—" Poole paused to chuckle. "Well, Harriet Thorndyke was keeping an eye on Carol.



The spectacle of two grown-ups embracing in broad daylight.

Really, I ought to make that woman a deputy. She telephoned us the minute the nurse left the house and Hawley, Cleve, myself and a man from the District Attorney's office were concealed in the storeroom before you two got there.

"Fay was intended to be blamed for your death, too. We would have found a box of aspirin tablets impregnated with cyanide in your handbag which Carol would have conveniently remembered Miss Thorndyke giving you. You know, of course, that Carol dropped the poison in your glass while you were getting the ice cubes.

"And now, that's about all there is to tell, isn't it?"

Carol Planned Suicide Note for Dorinda, Too

"No, not nearly all. What about my dog and the attack on me in my room and who followed me to the attic that day? And weren't you ever suspicious of Lana? She wouldn't tell you where she was the day Anne died and she ran away."

Poole threw up his hands in mock despair. "Which question do you want answered first? Carol followed you to the attic, of course. She'd just come in from her walk and saw you open the door of the attic when she went upstairs.

"And your dog—if you'd drunk your milk that night, you'd have been found with a suicide note, too, the next morning, nervous breakdown from the experiences you'd gone through, no doubt. Carol switched tablets on you as she did on Fay later. She looked in your room that night to find you gone and your dog staggering around the floor. She took him out of there in a hurry. She had him hidden in her closet when you knocked on her door. I don't know what she did with his body later on.

"But she wanted the poison she'd left in your room. If you'd taken it after Carrie and the rest of the household knew about the dog's disappearance and the spilled milk, it might have looked too suspicious. Her first chance to get it came the next night when she and Edward got home ahead of you. And then you surprised her in there. She struck you to prevent you turning on the light. She didn't want to kill you then. It wasn't her idea to have you found the victim of an attack."

Poole looked at Dorinda, his eyes bright with amusement. "About Lana. I wasn't worried about her. In the first place, she was much too small to be the yellow-haired girl. The first thing which strikes you when you look at her is her tinyness. And I had a pretty good idea where she'd been. I happened to see her driving out of the Van Sillar place about dusk one evening. Van Sillar's official residence is Arizona. He was getting a divorce from his fourth wife and he didn't want her to get any hint that he had another woman ready to take her place.

"Of course, a lot of what I've told you, I didn't know at the time I arrested the nurse. But Cleve had been very helpful—he told me about the dog and the attack on you and about the impersonation."

"The impersonation? But—he didn't know—" Dorinda stared at Cleve, her mouth open a little.

"And as soon as Carol was arrested, Edward talked," Poole hurried on. "I think he'd grown to hate her and at the same time her very ruthlessness fascinated him. He was a wishful thinker. She never told him anything and he really tried to believe the things which happened were what they appeared to be. He was horrified when Taylor was killed—Taylor was lured to The Silver Slipper by a telephone call promising information about Dorinda, by the way—but Edward put it out of his mind as well as he could.

Cleve Tells Dorinda He Wants Her for Wife

"And when Anne Delahay died, he told us he felt an actual relief, since, if her death hadn't been accidental, he believed it was impossible that Carol had anything to do with it.

"I don't know what they'll do with him. After all, it's to his credit that he saved Dorinda's life that Friday night. She'd have been doped when she stopped at the hamburger stand and Carol would have insisted on her driving when they left there. The nurse would have gotten out when she saw the dope taking effect and Dorinda would have been discovered in her wrecked car somewhere at the bottom of the cliff next morning with Carol safe back at Thorndyke House. Brother would have seen to that.

"She was determined on Dorinda's death from the very beginning. Whether Miss LaCroix was willing to continue the impersonation or not, she had no intention of sharing the money."

Dorinda shivered. "I'm still scared," she admitted in a small voice. "Did—did she say anything about Grandmother?"

"She wouldn't comment on that, even though she spilled the beans quite thoroughly after she found out Edward had talked—she even seemed a little proud of her planning. We'll probably never know the exact truth—but I think there's no doubt Mrs. Thorndyke died of a heart attack, whatever may have brought it on.

"And now I think you curious people do know just about all there is to know, except—oh, yes, there was the lawyer. She had no intention of killing him but she'd had a drink with him in his room that morning and gave him something which made him sick enough to delay the reading of the will. She'd enjoyed a mild flirtation with him at the hospital the summer before so knew him well enough to make sneaking into his room for a drink plausible. Her prompt action prevented him from becoming too ill. Her nurse's bag was a regular storehouse of poisons. She must have been assembling them for years."

Poole stood up, shook down his trouser legs, stretched. "Maybe it does seem she left herself wide open in some ways. But she counted too heavily on her own cleverness and the prestige of the Thorndykes. She never figured that there would be any real investigation."

When Cleve and Dorinda came out into the open air again, the fog had lifted. Seagulls wheeled above them in the pale sunlight. Dorinda stopped short on the sidewalk. "Oh, I've just thought—who was it Carol heard whispering in the hall that night?"

Cleve laughed. "Idiot child. Is that the first time that occured to you? Nobody, of couse. It sounded fishy to me the first time I heard it. Imagine two conspirators meeting in such a place and whispering loud enough to be overheard."

They walked on down the quiet street together. Then Dorinda asked, her voice very low, "Did—did you know about me all the time?"

Cleve's eyes twinkled as he looked down at her. "Not all the time, honey. But Carrie told me after your dog disappeared. For some reason she thought you needed protection just because you weren't the real Dorinda."

"And it doesn't make any difference?"

"Hell, sweet, I'm in love with a girl, not a name."

Three wandering children and a mongrel dog stared at the spectacle of two grown-ups embracing in broad daylight.

"That's all I want to be," she said contentedly.

She tucked her hand in his arm and they went on down the street.

AROUND THE HOUSE

Cut paper milk cartons lengthwise and use them for storing fish, meat or other produce in the refrigerator. They can be washed, drained and re-used.

When making muffins, have milk and eggs at room temperature for best results. This is especially important when melted shortening is used, because cold milk will solidify shortening.

Place gelatin salads in baking-powder cans for chilling and molding. Sliced in rings and served on shredded lettuce, such salads are both appetizing and attractive.

A grilled sandwich is welcome with cold accomplishments. Dip cheese sandwiches in a combination of beaten eggs, milk and salt, and brown on both sides in hot fat.

To successfully darn a woolen fabric of many colors, use a strand of each color of thread in the needle.

Starch burned on to the bottom of an iron can prove a nuisance in ironing. To clean a starch-stuck iron, let iron cool thoroughly, then rub bottom with a damp cloth sprinkled with baking soda. Soda cleans without scratching, is perfectly safe.

If a loaf of bread is in danger of molding, cut it in thin slices, place the slices in a pan and place in the oven. When dry, put through a food chopper, store in a closed container, and use for stuffing and puddings.

When baking meat loaf, place strips of bacon lengthwise in the bottom of the pan. This prevents sticking and also flavors the loaf.

Boys Made A Good Record

A profitable week waa spent by Troop 112 at Camp Waubunaquat, which is located 5 miles east of White Earth, Minn, Troop 112 had 17 of it's 19 members present for the weeks array of scouting courses which were given, and which now qualifies 14 of them for second class rating.

Following are the scouters who attended: Ronald Smith and Wayne Wegge, patrol leaders; and Jan Hunt, Clifford Jenkins, Robert Nyval, Gerald Mortenson Billy Brosseau, Donovan Peterson, Lyle Hagenson, Allen Stienhauer, Leon Horien, Eldon Ness, LaVern Reierson, ElRay Christenson, DelRay Christenson and Kenneth Smith.

Classes were held during the week on the following subjects: First Aid, Compass Trail, Morse Code, Canoe Preparation, Nature Hike and Knot Tying.

On Wednesday night Chief Little Cloud from White Earth visited the Scouts and met with them around the Council Fire and told stories, sang songs, gave a dance and a short talk on conservation.

On Friday afternoon the troop crossed the lake with equipment for an overnight camp. Upon reaching location lean-to tents were set up, and preparation for the evening meal was commenced. While the meal was being prepared, all took a dip in the cooling water. By 7:00 appetites were enormous and all were ready to eat soup, baked potatoes and pigs-in-blankets prepared in aluminum foil. Cooking luck varied greatly, but everyone was so hungry they ate their preparation regardless of what it looked like. 112 does have some good cooks, and all improved to a certrin extent.

In a set-up game which tested second class skills called "Gold Rush", Troop 112 won second place honors, which is an excellent accomplishment for a troop as new as 112. This game served as a test for passing or meeting qualifications for becoming Second Class Scouts.

Scouter Gerald Mortenson was selected as the outstanding member of the troop for the week at camp. Troop 112 is proud of Gerald!

The Camp had on it's staff a Champlain, and the majority of Troop 112 attended services whenever they were held.

From the above you can see that the boys did spend a profitable week.

The fellows are beginning to get the real feel of scouting and already are planning on what they will do for their weeks outing next year.

Scoutmaster Lon Inman, Assisting Scoutmasters Mel Johnson and Hartley Peterson took turns during the week acting as leaders of the scouts at the camp.

Appreciation and thanks are due to the Scouts fathers and others who generously transported the Scouts to and from camp.

OUTLAW GUNS

BY E. E. HALLERAN

THE STORY SO FAR: Dan Frazer has come to believe that Archie Scott, murdered government agent, has hidden a message revealing the location of arms cache in one of the bullets of his gun. Frazer had lent the gun to Helen Bartell. She had returned it to him, but had reloaded it with fresh bullets first. When he goes to her home in town he finds that she has left Mesa Verde with an old prospector as her guardian to stay for a while in the Bartell's house in the hills. Frazer makes a search for the original bullets in Scott's gun. He finds them, pries one apart and reveals a small paper. On it is written "El Oso Pequeno," which means "The Little Bear."

CHAPTER XIII

Frazer nodded his thanks, still trying to make himself sound completely casual. "If I don't find him right away it won't matter. I just came around to get something I left here last evening."

He started through between the buildings and the Mexican joined him promptly, a brief gesture his only farewell to the girl. "May I walk with you?" he asked politely. "Eet ees not wise for me to go about alone in Mesa Verde thees morning. People are much ecited. They do not approve of Mexico or Mexicans today."

Frazer stared briefly, feeling that the man was completely in earnest. "I guess there's something to that. We sorta get to hate the other side of the line because we don't know what's over there, and we're afraid it's something dangerous."

"You say eet better than I could hope to do. Perhaps eef there were no border we would not hate the Gringo and he would not hate us."

Kranz Appears Anxious, Goes Off With Gonzales

They walked in silence then, headed toward the crowd which now filled the street in front of the hotel. Someone there seemed to be making a speech and, judging by the cheers, it was quite an emotional harangue. The mob was rising to the occasion and Frazer could feel the tension come over him once more. This thing might break into violent action at any moment. Irreparable damage might be done before the troops could arrive to control the situation.

Then he saw that it was Ben Chew who was doing the talking. The hotel man was standing in the door of his place, evidently doing a bit of rabble-rousing that was ominously effective. Alredy he had his listeners angered to a fighting pitch, and it was only a question of time until the word would be given for the moves that would make a shambles of the border country.

The Mexican spoke in a low voice. "I will wait here," he said, pointing to a nearby doorway. "It will be better. Those men will soon be without any sense."

Frazer nodded quietly and stopped beside him. Somehow he was beginning to feel a little differently about this wiry young Mexican. Maybe he would turn out to be the weak spot in Emil Kranz's armor. And Kranz was still the man to be feared, that much he knew.

Almost with the thought he saw the blond man coming toward them out of the crowd, closely followed by a little man whose sour epression might well have been the result of a sore chin. Here was the combination Frazer had confidently expected to find. Kranz was tied up with the left-handed rascal who had made that raid on the hotel room. Assuming that the little southpaw was also the killer or The Duke—and there no longer seemed to be much room for doubt—it made an interesting combination.

They came directly toward the pair in the doorway, carefully ignoring Frazer while Kranz growled, "Better to come with us, Gonzales. There is something which you should know."

Kranz took the Mexican's arm and hustled him away toward one of the adobe honkey-tonks which Frazer had inspected so briefly on the previous evening. The big German was showing his apprehension about something. There was angry impatience in his eyes and in his very stride as he headed for the cover of the adobe building. Offhand, Frazer had a hunch that the something buzzing around in the German's bullet head was not merely the news from the Sonora mines.

Then he saw another pair leave the crowd and follow the other three into the saloon. Ed Delaplane was talking earnestly—and a little perplexedly—to a tall, lanky man whose slouching walk was curiously familiar. Frazer did not recall that he had ever seen the long, bony face before, but he was sure he had seen that slouching walk and the angular frame. This was the man who had tried to roll the drunken prospector outside the door of Bartell's store.

Then he began to realize the possibilities in this meeting. There was every reason to believe that Emil Kranz was a man of some brains. Gonzales, also, was nobody's fool. They might possibly piece out the meaning of last night's events and come up with the right answer.

Almost for the first time since leaving the Bartell place Fraber remembered that mysterious slip of paper in his pocket. He turned promptly and went into the hotel. Maybe a little concentrated thought might help at a time like this. Obviously Scott had intended the paper to convey a message. The problem now was to decipher it.

Bartell, Chew and three other well-dressed citizens were in the meeting anyone. Alone in his room he studied the paper carefully, holding it up to the light in the hope of bar, but Frazer went past without speaking, going upstairs without picking out some hidden markings, and finally singeing it cautiously with a match in an attempt to bring out invisible ink. Nothing happened.

He had been cudgeling his brain for a considerable time when footsteps sounded in the hall outside. Boot heels rang there with a hint of excitement and then someone knocked, not loudly but with a definite trace of impatience.

Delaplane Tells Frazer Kranz Is After Message

Frazer waited only long enough to stow the paper and the empty shell in his pocket, then he opened the door to face Ed Delaplane. The deputy was tight-lipped and grim, his eyes betraying a peculiar combination of fear and anger.

"Perhaps eef there were no border we would not hate the Gringo and he would not hate us."

"I want to see you—alone," he said abruptly.

"Take a look," Frazer invited. "I'm alone—for a change. Mostly I have company up here but . . ."

"Don't talk nonsense. Did you give Helen Bartell a gun last night?"

The question was startling, but it was not too much of a shock. The deputy's face almost told the story by itself, particularly when Frazer knew that he had just been in conference with those other men.

"Who wants to know?" Frazer countered.

"I do. And I'm not trying to pull anything out of the way, either. Certain people think you did, and they're out to get it. Do you understand that much?"

"I understand," Frazer said quietly. "Who's the man who really wants—whatever it is?"

Delaplane grinned thinly. "All right. I'm going to gamble that you're playing this straight. Kranz is the man who's after that bullet."

Apparently he expected the remark to draw some sort of outburst of confidence from Frazer, but the big man merely nodded. "I suspected as much. Who's Kranz working for? Candino?"

The deputy grunted in surprise. "You know a lot, don't you?"

Frazer did not relax. "I know enough to spot any lies you're getting ready to tell me. Enough to figure that you're working for Vasquez—and a little sorry you got into it. Better stick to the truth."

"Let me tell you," he suggested, his tone that of a man who was glad to be relieved of a burden. "I was in on the original deal between Bartell and Vasquez. I knew of the plans, but I wasn't impressed too much by them. I was afraid we'd all get into a peck of trouble if we tried any funny business about bringing Sonora into Arizona."

"Right enough so far," Frazer murmured. "Even with your fears. Who else was in the inner circle? You, Bartell, Chew . . . and who else?"

"Vasquez himself at first. Snagg, Tombleson, Gale and Mahoney. Later it was Kranz and Gonzales as agents for Vasquez."

"Then Kranz changed sides?"

"It looks like it to me. He's still acting as segundo for Vasquez in his dealings with the local men, but I'm sure he's planning a double-cross."

Frazer did not press him as to the source of his hunch. He simply remarked, "I don't know some of those names. Snagg, Tombleson and Mahoney. Who are they?"

The unhappy grin came back to the corner of the deputy's mouth. "Mahoney and Tombleson are downstairs drinking with Bartell and Chew. Maybe you saw them when you came up. Tombleson is the local agent of the copper company. Mahoney's boss of the express company that handles all the hauling for the copper people. You met Snagg, I reckon. He's the little ranny who was with Kranz out in the street."

"I've met Snagg," Franz agreed dryly. "When did you first sell out to Vasquez?"

Intricacies of the Plot Explained to Frazer

"That's what I'm trying to explain. After I decided that Bartell and the copper men were playing with fire I didn't know just what ought to be done. It looked to me like they ought to be stopped, but I hadn't made up my mind how to stop them when Kranz showed up in town. He made me a proposition. Vasquez wanted to get his hands on the munitions Bartell had collected. If he could do that he would have all the aces in his own hand and he could turn the whole show into a revolution for the private benefit of Ramon Vasquez. The copper interests would be frozen out. That suited me. I didn't care how many revolutions went on south of the line; all I cared about was that we avoid the trouble that was sure to come if the thing turned into a filibustering party."

Frazer began to have a little more confidence in the deputy's honesty. "What was your part in the Vasquez game?"

"I was to locate the munitions which Bartell and Chew had hidden so carefully. It was the one thing they did with any show of sense. No one knew where the guns were stored, and they wouldn't tell, even when there was nobody in the meeting but men from this side of the line.

"Last night Jack Snagg hustled into town with the word that the Federal man who was searching the hills had got away from the boys who were watching him. We already knew that. One of the guards had followed him into town and killed him before he could talk to anybody." He seemed to realize the implications in the statement, for he added hastily, "I didn't know that the man had even been located—and I didn't know that the man who was shot last night was a Federal officer until Kranz told me. That was when I began to realize that the Dutchman was playing a game of his own. He must have organized the stage hold-up and the killing of that other officer."

Frazer didn't correct the error. "I guess you've called the turn on that one." he said quietly. "But what's the story of the bullet?"

"Sorry. I run into so many explanations that I get off the track. Snagg brought word that the detective knew something. Somewhere over in the mountains west of town he eluded his guards, and when they spotted him again he was heading for town, apparently finished with his search. One of the spotters saw him write something on a bit of paper and hide it in a shell case. They didn't have any orders about anything like that, so they just passed the word along to Kranz. By that time the dead man's gun had disappeared."

Frazer smiled dryly. "So you started a campaign to get it away from me."

"Sure. I had to get it before Kranz could beat me to it. If Kranz got the information and turned it over to Candino we'd be in a worse mess than ever. Vasquez might use the guns to raise hell in Mexico, but Candino is nothing more than a bandit chief. He'd raid on both sides of the border—and would probably take a crack at Mesa Verde just for luck. He's that sort of a cutthroat."

"All right. I'll take your word for it. You tried to make me give up the guns I had, then you sent your red-head friend up to steal them. Who sent Snagg?"

"Kranz. He knew I'd tried in the saloon, but he didn't know that Sally had made the attempt. So he sent Snagg up." He grinned a little more happily. "I guess Snagg got all that was coming to him."

"Not quite," Frazer said grimly. "I had to let him escape so he would lead me to his gang. That's how I know just about all you've told me. I suppose it was that lanky thief who gave you the clue to the mystery?"

If a hole in the plaster wall becomes too large to hold the screw, take the screw out, pack the hole with steel wool, and put the screw back in. Or, poke a wooden match into the hole, break it off at the wall surface, and then replace the screw.

Small, deep nail holes in walls are rather difficult to fill with plaster of paris. It's a lot easier if you just mix a little talcum powder or cornstarch with a few drops of water, and force the mixture into the hole, smoothing it off with you fingers around the edges.

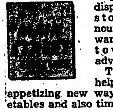
Food Retailers Put Emphasis Upon Vegetables During Week

IN YOUR home town newspaper this week and in the bins of your local food stores, the spotlight is upon vegetables — leafy green and succulent foods in plentiful supply this time of year from the rich variety of which you can furnish every vitamin and mineral need of the human body.

In season, the price of vegetables makes them especially tempting to the housewife shopping within the limits of a difficult food budget. At the peak of the vegetable harvest, grocers strive to keep garden produce moving at a fairly fast clip to prevent spoilage of the wide selection they offer. Grocers employ attractive displays in their stores and announce their green wares in home town newspaper advertising.

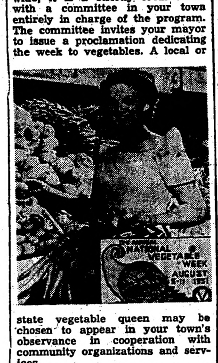


The newspaper helps by printing appetizing new ways to serve vegetables and also time-tested recipes, all emphasizing the nutrient value in the various soil-grown products.

To further the advantages to food consumers arising from the large supply of garden supplies upon the home town market this time of year and to minimize the economic chance dealers take in this sudden and large supply of perishable foods, an unusual health food event has been inaugurated. This is National Vegetable Week (August 5-11), now being observed in your home town and other home towns like it across the nation.

National Vegetable Week is designed to teach local grocers the most effective way to move vegetables from their bins to family tables with the health and budget of consumers as a prime consideration.

This big project was inaugurated three years ago. Although nationwide, it is a strictly local affair with a committee in your town entirely in charge of the program. The committee invites your mayor to issue a proclamation dedicating the week to vegetables. A local or state vegetable queen may be chosen to appear in your town's observance in cooperation with community organizations and services.



The National Vegetable Queen, Miss Elaine Tessman, Osseo, Minn., an attractive brunette, is appearing as the guest of honor at many related events during the summer.

Local newspaper editors and program directors are receiving many helpful ideas upon vegetable promotion, recipes, crop and production facts and local marketing from the county agent, home demonstration agent and marketing agents for vegetable growers.

In home town newspapers and in the windows of food retailers are seen such slogans as:

"It's the green stuff that counts!"

"Don't peel aways that Venus Vegetable Goodness!"

"For health's sake, eat more vitamin-powered vegetables!"

"This is vegetable season that gives that lettuce complexion."

The president of the Vegetable Growers Association of America, Walter F. Pretzer, Cleveland, who is conducting the sponsorship of National Vegetable Week, recently stated: "National Vegetable Week and the American Vegetable Queen have done much to bring to the attention of our nation the importance of vitamin-powered vegetables and the real place of agriculture in the life of the community than any other activity our 42-year-old association has ever undertaken.

SOAP BOX DERBY TIME

Racing Benedicts Tuning Cars For Big Soap Box Race Prizes

SOAP BOX DERBY racing is often a family affair in White Plains, N.Y., where many brother combinations have competed in the last 12 derbies. But, as families go, the racing Benedicts, of 8 De Kalb Avenue, have gone a lot farther than most.

There hasn't been a Soap Box Derby without at least one of the six Benedict brothers since 1940. This year there are three in the race: David, 15, Robert, 12, and Edward, 11.

Tune-up headquarters for the Benedicts' cars is Ted Skitt's service station. Skitt is an official distributor for the special Soap Box Derby lubricant that Shell Oil Company gives to all Derby entrants.

Dave Benedict, the Derby veteran of the three, knows it pays to keep his car properly lubricated. In 1949, as Class A runner-up, he won a bicycle. He won two heats last year, one in 1947. Now in his last year—he'll be too old next year—Dave is tuning his car to perfection.

The big Derby lure is a trip to Akron, Ohio, in August, where the White Plains champion competes against champions from other cities in the All American Soap Box Derby finals. This poses a problem for Mr. and Mrs. Benedict. Although they naturally want the boys to win, they realize that if one of them does, the others will insist on going to Akron to cheer him on in the "big one"—and vacation plans will have to be changed, their effecting the whole family's plans.

The three other Benedict brothers are either too young or too old for Soap Box Derby racing. The oldsters, both Derby veterans, are Jim, who teaches industrial arts in the Dalton, Mass., high school, and Alex, a Marine stationed at Le Jeune, N.C. The youngster is Brian, age 4, and already an enthusiast. He won't be eligible for the Derby until 1958. Then, he undoubtedly will keep the Benedict name rolling for another four years.

FIRST AID TO THE AILING HOUSE

BY ROGER C. WHITMAN

Question: I just finished the staggering task of removing some casein paint from a bathroom ceiling, by using a strong water softener solution and a scraper, I am now down to the plaster. Do I treat the bare plaster the same as when new; that is, by using sizing, undercoat and then paint? I had to remove the casein paint because it started to peel and let go of the ceiling.

Answer: You did all right, for you succeeded in doing what you started out to do. But the water softening solution should all be thoroughly washed off, for if you let it stay on the ceiling, it will continue to work on your new paint and spoil the job. Use plenty of water for the wash-off. When the ceiling is quite dry, apply two coats of enamel undercoater and a finish of enamel following the directions on the label. Where you made your original mistake was in putting casein paint on the bathroom ceiling. The steam loosened the paint and caused it to peel. Enamel is the right kind of finish for bathroom and kitchen surfaces (unless you are going to use other hard finishes for the walls). Flat wall paints are not supposed to be used for these rooms.

Coal Was Created Before Human Advent

What is coal? How was it made? Well, it all started many millions of years ago, in what is called the Carboniferous Period. We sometimes call it the Coal Age. The climate was very warm and moist all over the earth. There were heavy rains. Plants grew fast and luxuriantly, especially in swampy areas.

In our country, these great swamps extended in all directions to where we find coal today in what is now Pennsylvania and the whole Appalachian range, the middle Atlantic states, the Rocky Mountains, and even the far away Pacific Coast. The forest trees resembled giant ferns, reeds, and mosses, rising to heights of 100 to 120 feet, and many feet in diameter. Other trees looked much like enormous ferns, climbing 50 feet into the air.

Everything was green and lush in this strange world. The giant trees, ferns, grasses, insect life and other creatures, died, fell into the swamps and became part of the sea life buried there. Heavy rains washed soil and sand from high places into the swampy lowlands. Land gradually sank. The great inland seas advanced and covered up these peat-like bogs, keeping out air and bacteria that cause decay. Again conditions on the earth changed. The land was raised up and once more forests grew, flourished, and died. Again the land sank and the seas advanced.

This process continued over and over through untold thousands of years. The sunshine, whose warmth and magic made these forests, was buried with the vegetation. Slowly the forests piled up one atop of the other, the peat layers began changing into something we now call lignite, and the enormous deposits of dead leaves, branches, trunks, insect life, and sea life were transformed slowly into coal and other minerals.

The quality of legume and grass silage can be improved by letting the green material partially wilt before putting it into the silo, and by adding 60 pounds of molasses, or 150 pounds of ground shelled corn, or 200 pounds of ground ear corn to each ton as the silo is filled.

MRS. HERREN DISCOVERS THAT HADACOL BRINGS REAL RELIEF

HADACOL Helps Folks Who Suffer Weak, Run-Down Conditions, Nervousness, Sleeplessness Caused by an Upset Stomach and Poor Appetite, If Due to Deficiencies of Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron

In these days of the fast pace of life, with folks always hurrying, you simply have to feel well to keep going. And if you are weak and tired, nervous, have no appetite, don't sleep well and feel run-down, life can be mighty unpleasant. Mrs. Martha Herren of 113-C N. Chevy Chase Drive, Glendale, California, used to feel that way. But she heard how many folks who suffered these conditions when due to a deficiency of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron were being helped by today's great HADACOL. She began taking HADACOL and now feels so good that she just can't say enough for HADACOL.

Here is what Mrs. Herren says, in her own words, about HADACOL: "For a time I had been run-down, was just simply tired all the time. I was nervous, couldn't sleep well and didn't have an appetite at all. I would just pick at my food. I started taking HADACOL, as I had heard so much about it. In just a couple of weeks I could certainly tell a difference. My appetite picked up—I was actually hungry at meal times. I was no longer as nervous and tired. I simply can't say enough for HADACOL. I am still taking it, and believe me, I will always have it on hand. I know how much it has really helped me, and sincerely, HADACOL is wonderful."

Yes, HADACOL makes it possible to actually relieve the REAL CAUSE of weak, run-down conditions, poor appetite, nervousness and sleeplessness caused by an upset stomach when due to a deficiency of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron in the system.

AND EVEN MORE IMPORTANT! Continued use of this great HADACOL not only gives continuous complete relief but helps prevent these conditions from returning when due to such deficiencies. Now, that's the kind of product you have been waiting for. That's the kind you should buy and start taking at once. And HADACOL is so easy to take—comes in pleasant liquid form and is so easily and quickly absorbed and assimilated in the blood, ready to go to work for you immediately.

HADACOL Is So Effective

You may have tried other Vitamin preparations or other Vitamin and Mineral preparations, so we make you this offer. Try a bottle of HADACOL today if you need Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron. You be the judge. If you do not believe that HADACOL is the best Vitamin and Mineral preparation you have ever taken, we will gladly send you back your money. That's our positive money-back guarantee. You take no chances.

So be fair to yourself. Don't put off finding relief another day. If you are suffering from these deficiency-caused ailments, you owe it to yourself to start taking HADACOL today.

U. S. S. Niagara

In a naval battle on Lake Erie during the war of 1812, Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry's flagship, "Lawrence," was shot away. The commodore transferred his flag in an open boat to the U.S.S. "Niagara" and turned the tide against the British. The "Niagara" later was sunk as obsolete under orders of the navy. In 1911, it was raised, rebuilt and taken for a tour of the Great Lakes, but sank in Misery Bay again. Under supervision of the Niagara memorial commission of Pennsylvania it was raised a second time and rebuilt.

Driver's Habits

Some drivers wear out tires in 10,000 miles or less, others in 20,000 miles, some get 30,000 miles, and others greater average mileages. This is largely due to a driver's habits and operating conditions. "Jackrabbit" starts, sudden stops, excessive use of brakes, high speeds on curves and frequent stops and starts in traffic all tend to wear away tread rubber and rob the tire of miles of life!

Peak Rail Expansion

The greatest period of expansion in railroad history occurred from 1880 to 1889, inclusive, when 74,720 miles of new railway lines were opened. The largest number of miles completed in any one year was 12,876 in 1887.

Farm Economists Call Fertilizer 'Cheapest Crop Production Item'

FERTILIZERS are still the "cheapest crop producer per dollar invested" among various production items the farmer buys, according to a recent statement by Michigan farm economists.

These specialists point out that efficient, high crop production per acre is the key to maintaining farm profits and keeping costs low. Fertilizer use is an essential factor in such a program.

A recent statement in Michigan Farm Economics, published by Michigan State College's department of agricultural economics, lists these steps for building efficient production per acre: (1) A good crop rotation that improves soil tilth and increases the organic matter supply; (2) Keeping output costs low by buying production items that are relatively cheap. Fertilizer is still the cheapest crop producer per dollar invested; (3) Putting the emphasis on cash crops that use more machinery and less hand labor.

Eat Out-of-Season Foods All Year, Thanks to Rural Power

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Martin, who farm about 13 miles northwest of Leonard, North Dakota, have found that with their electric home freezer they can eat almost any food they want — any time of the year.

Mrs. Martin is storing fish in the photo above, but she also stores fruits, vegetables, meats and even baked goods, in the huge 18-cubic foot model.

"We really like the freezer," says Mrs. Martin, "because we can keep so many foods and eat them later. Since we have our own orchard, we store an extra quantity of fruits. Storing them in the freezer is much easier than canning them."

The Martins, who have had rural electric power since 1941, are members of the Cass County Electric Cooperative. They do most of their work the electric way.

"We even have an electric lawn mower," says Mrs. Martin.

This is another example of rural electric power doing an amazing job to make life more convenient and more enjoyable for farmers all over the Upper Midwest. If you do not have an electric home freezer now, see your nearest electric dealer. Learn the complete story of the convenience, the economy, the better-than-ever eating you get with an electric home freezer. Make plans to install one immediately.

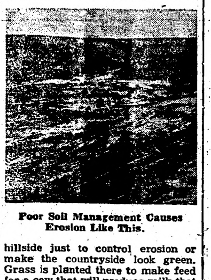
Blame for Erosion Rests on Poor Soil Management Methods

THE blame for soil erosion usually rests on poor soil management rather than on washing of the land declared Dr. L. D. Baver, formerly with the Ohio State Agronomy Department.

"When we ask the question, 'How serious is soil erosion?' he said, "we probably have phrased the query wrongly. A better question would be is 'How serious is poor soil management?' "

Poor soil management, he said, affects more people than soil erosion. It affects people on level lands as well as rolling and hilly areas. Good soil management on the rolling lands includes more than erosion control.

"Good soil management," he said, "is closely allied to good farm management. You do not put grass on a hillside just to control erosion or make the countryside look green. Grass is planted there to make feed for a cow that will produce milk that will help rear a better boy or girl."



Poor Soil Management Causes Erosion Like This.

He pointed out that good soil management can restore exhausted land to profitable crop production. He cited tests at the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station at Wooster, where six inches of surface soil was removed from impoverished land. By good soil management, the subsoil's fertility level was brought above the average for Ohio. At Raleigh, N. C., where he formerly was dean of the agricultural college, land that could produce only 10 bushels of corn per acre was changed into pasture. The soil was limed and fertilized with phosphate and potash. Now the legume-grass pasture yields digestible nutrients equivalent to 92 bushels of corn per acre.

Fertilizer's Carryover Value Boosts Yields of All Crops in Rotation

FERTILIZERS have carryover values that benefit every crop in the rotation, reports the Missouri College of Agriculture, in citing recent tests on the George Stine farm in Ozark County.

As expected, corn yields were higher the year the fertilizer was added. But three years later when the plots were in legume crops, Stine reported four times as much Ladino clover growing on plots fertilized with phosphate and potash as on the unfertilized plot. The difference was even greater on the sweet clover crop. Practically no clover was growing on the unfertilized plot, while there were thick, heavy stands on the fertilized fields.

University of Wisconsin agronomists report that alfalfa yields were 2½ times as big on fields topdressed two years ago with 500 pounds per acre of 0-9-27 fertilizer, as on unfertilized check plots.

RYE, winter wheat and other winter small grains can help you stretch the pasture season this year, give your beef and dairy cattle extra grazing days and cut down costly feed bills.

These special fall crops should be planted early enough to produce good growth, says the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee. They should be planted in grain fields not seeded to legume-grass mixtures.

Adding fertilizer with the seed will get the rye up fast, give you good pasture during the fall and help the crop survive severe weather this winter. Agronomists recommend using a complete fertilizer carrying nitrogen, phosphate and potash at seeding time.

The Middle West Soil Improvement Committee suggests two other steps for making pasture pay maximum returns this fall:

1—Topdress and graze permanent pastures with a complete fertilizer to give fast recovery after the summer heat.

2—Add plant nutrients and graze old meadows that will be plowed for corn next spring.

A topdressing in the spring of nitrogen or of a nitrogen, phosphate and potash fertilizer will spur the growth of pasture grasses and legumes. It will enable you to get cattle out on the fields earlier and reduce expenses of barn feeding.

Our County Nurse Says

Minnesota has been fortunate so far this summer - there have been very few cases of poliomyelitis. But we must remember that polio may strike anywhere, at any time, and we do not yet know how to prevent it.

We do know several ways to lessen the bad effects of polio. Our State Health Department joins with the National Foundation in recommending the following precautions:

1. Be alert for signs of illness: headache, sore throat, fever, upset stomach, sore muscles, stiff neck and back, extreme tiredness or nervousness, trouble in breathing or swallowing.
2. Put a sick person to bed at once, away from others, and call a doctor.
3. Practice cleanliness. Wash hands before eating and after using toilet. Keep food clean, cool and covered.
4. Avoid getting overtired.
5. Avoid chilling. Don't swim long in cold water or sit around in a wet bathing suit or in wet clothes.
6. Postpone mouth and throat operations if there is and polio in your neighborhood.

Remember - at least half of all polio patients get well without any crippling. You may help prevent crippling by observing the simple precautions listed above.

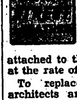
Modern Schools Are Indication Of Home Town Progressiveness

School bells soon will toll in the home towns, and while many sections this year face the perennial handicaps of too many pupils, outmoded buildings and too few teachers, rural educators are hopeful about the future.

Progress is being made, they say, in educating the local community to the need for providing better facilities for children so they may compete in later life with graduates of schools in the most progressive communities. With the public—the home town taxpayers—aroused, schoolmen believe it should not be difficult to solve many of the knotty problems that have retarded rural education.

While progress has been made in the approach to the problems, there actually have been greater advancement in the improvement of the buildings themselves, a nation-wide study shows. Twenty-five years ago the United States had about 200,000 one-teacher little red schoolhouses. Today the number has dropped to 71,000. These schools, despite the sentiment attached to them, are disappearing at the rate of about 7,500 a year.



To replace them, progressive architects are designing low and sprawling one-story structures that combine the outdoors with the indoors to provide intimate, friendly, colorful classrooms bathed in natural light. These schools, of course, are being constructed in areas where citizens have put community spirit above selfish desires and voted to consolidate tax districts in order to finance adequate facilities.

These schools are monuments to the community's progressiveness which is often paced by the local newspaper and merchants. A progressive, modern school is a great attraction for any town.

If this trend continues, what will the typical school of the future look like?

It will be more like the modern home and less like an institution, say prominent authorities on classroom design.

"Educators are beginning to realize the importance of making schools as homelike as possible so there is not too sudden a transition from what children have been used to at home," explained Lawrence R. Perkins, architect who has designed some of the outstanding schools in the midwest.

Classrooms will feature vision walls of clear glass to bring the outdoors inside and, at the same time, allow young children on the outside — particularly those just starting—to see what awaits them in school. Window walls, like those which have become a characteristic feature of modern home design, help allay the fear many youngsters have of what lies behind the walls of the institutional type building.

In the matter of daylighting for classrooms, the architect gets an approving nod from R. L. Biesele, Jr., research professor of engineering at Southern Methodist university in Dallas. For several years Professor Biesele has been conducting a research study for Libby-Owens-Ford Glass Company on daylight engineering for schools. He has determined that large areas of clear glass with flexible controls provide abundant daylight from the varying conditions of sun, sky and clouds.

"Bring the daylight indoors," he advises, "and sometimes maybe sunlight, too. I would make the classrooms a space for living, growing and learning, where children are in constant touch with the outdoors, with its continual interplay of light and shade and color."

School architects, city planners and educators also feel that many other features of the future classroom will create a friendly atmosphere. One good example is a school recently built at New Canaan, Conn.

Kindergartens and lounges have fireplaces. Every classroom has a door opening onto walks, gardens and playfields and each door is painted a different vivid color to make identification easy.

While building costs cause many headaches among educators and home towners today, there's a feeling that the costs of maintenance and operation have been cut in the modern type of schools.

Heating bills may be lowered through use of double pane insulating heat loss in winter months and, at the same time, make use of solar heat.

Maintenance costs also are reduced through the use of the vision wall of clear glass which never requires painting and is easier to keep clean than any other type of surface. Glass with patterned surfaces not only gets dirty, but also adds so much obscurity that transmission of light is impaired before cleaning, tests reveal.

Modern schools are considerably safer, architects believe, because the one-story structure eliminates the need and dangers of stairways. Better daylighting also improves the safety factor.

Classrooms are designed so that younger pupils may occupy one wing or section, with their adjacent play areas, while older pupils are in another section, instead of being interspersed haphazardly through a multi-storied building.

Abundant daylight and a blending of outdoors and indoors make this spacious classroom in the Deerfield, Ill., primary school an attractive place for younger children. Tables are located at most desirable spots. Children sit on the floor for some work.

Educators point out that far-sighted action by local citizens is necessary to obtain such improvements. Considerable progress has been made in consolidating the small, poor tax districts into larger, more prosperous ones as a result of work of the National Education Association in pointing out advantages of cooperative financing.

In Illinois, for example, the number of school districts has been reduced since 1945 from 12,000 to 4,580. For the most part the new areas have been organized according to community units, a typical county having from three to six such community units. Marked progress also has been made in Arkansas, Missouri, Wyoming, Idaho, North Dakota, Minnesota, Colorado and South Carolina.

The surveys were conducted by three committees composed of farmers, business men and professional men, and women, housewives, parents of school children representing various influential and responsible elements of the community, and high school students. Their final recommendations, which gave a priority rating to the construction of two rural elementary schools, an attendance center and two city schools, were passed on to the townspeople.

Cooperative effort of that kind has become more common since schools have become community centers in many places, educators report. Today the school building is not merely a place for children to learn the three Rs; it is a gathering place for residents of all ages.

A homelike interior blended with the natural exterior and warmth of sunlight is obtained in this Cicero, Ill., school. This is another example of what the modern school can be.

SPORTSMAN'S HORIZON

Crappie Lore

If numbers mean anything, one of the more important game fishes in the midwest is the crappie. This is no bait-smashing, rod-bending battler. Old "Spots" is almost gentle. But, make no mistake about it, he is a crowd pleaser. There's something intriguing about crappie fishing.

The crappies are members of that ever-popular family, the sunfishes. And, if they can be compared, they may be easily identified. The white crappie has the shorter dorsal fin, is the longer of the two fish, and has a "dished" forehead. Both fish have deep-bodied, much flattened profiles so typical of the panfish. Both are sprinkled with black on a silver background. There is a difference in color patterns, however. The white crappie has its black spots carelessly spaced in loose, vertical bars, while the black crappie is as liberally and aimlessly sprinkled as a piece of Grandma's calico; whence it gets one of its common names—calico bass.

As one might expect, color is the weakest of characters, for the young black crappie are barred as are white crappie. Positive identification requires closer observation. Fishermen commonly separate the two fish by counting the spines of the dorsal fin. Usually the black crappie has seven or, perhaps, eight spines; whereas, the white crappie commonly has six. A combination of color pattern and spine count almost always establishes the identity of one's fish.

Crappies normally spawn in May in most midwest waters. Neither species is a colonial nest builder as are many sunfish. Fifteen or twenty feet uually separate individual nests. Root wads and weed clumps are preferred sites, although depth of water is apparently immaterial. Nesting areas may be found in ten inches or ten feet of water.

Throughout the range of these fishes, the black is found in cooler, clearer waters and seems to prefer a hard bottom; the white is well pleased in warmer, more turbid waters and is not averse to mud bottoms. The same preferences are exhibited in choosing nesting sites.

White crappie build up populations faster than do black crappie. Since both species readily become overpopulated in small bodies of water, the black crappie is logically the more desirable fish for lake stocking. Neither is suitable in restricted pond waters.

There are occasional reports of two- and three-pound crappies, and larger fish have been caught. None the less, the average good crappie weighs about ten ounces.

Although crappie have been kept in aquaria for ten years, a seven- or eight-year veteran is an old warrior.

Crappie are school fish and are well traveled. A quarter-mile journey is not unusual during the daily reconnaissance for food. Both species are weed-loving fish and it is not surprising that they take a large variety of aquatic insects. Although a bucket of small minnows is standard equipment for crappie fishermen, food studies reveal that these fish take about ten times as much other food as they do minnows but nevertheless a properly placed minnow approaches the irresistible where crappie are concerned.

Fly and bait casting equipment take a respectable number of fish. Small plugs, spoons, or fly and spinner combinations are quite successful when properly used.

To insure a full stringer, crappie fishermen should first select a promising location. A submerged brush pile, a fallen tree, a weed bed —these are the reserved sections in the tournament of the spotted sunfish.

Once a school has been located, strikes are numerous. But the angler must take advantage of his good fortune; these foraging feeders come and go as quietly as a summer breeze.

The long slender filaments of feathers are indifferent conductors of heat, but retain a considerable amount of air which resists the egress or ingress of internal or external heat, thus keeping birds comfortable in hot or cold weather.

Large Spinners

The important fact to remember when using large casting spinners is to keep them moving fast enough to make the blades spin freely, whether casting or trolling. It is a good idea to reel the lure through the water close to you a few times to get an idea of how fast it must be worked for best results. These lures, as a rule, must be moved much faster than the smaller spinners to get effective flash and action.

OUTLAW GUNS

BY E. E. HALLERAN

THE STORY SO FAR: Archie Scott's message, supposed to be a clue to the location of a hidden arms cache, is finally uncovered by Dan Frazer. It consists of three words: The Little Bear, written in Spanish. Tension is building up in Mesa Verde. Deputy Ed Delaplane comes to Frazer and tells him that a big German, Emil Kranz, is working with a Mexican bandit, Candine, to double-cross Derek Bartell and get possession of the munitions which Bartell himself had collected and hidden. The supposition is that if Candine and his bandits had the powder and guns they would start carrying out large-scale depredations on both sides of the border.

CHAPTER XIV

"Sure. We never thought that you might have picked up three guns last night. You didn't have one when you went out, but you had two when you came back. So everybody figured that one of them was the gun with the trick bullet in it. Then we heard that you'd taken a gun from Jess Ames. Evidently you must have left a gun somewhere—and you'd only been one place, so far as anybody could find out."

"Fair enough," Frazer approved. "I was a long time figuring it out, but that's how it was. The officer's gun was left with Miss Bartell for her protection."

Delaplane nodded. "Kranz had it figured that way."

When it became apparent that Delaplane was not going to say anything else Frazer asked abruptly, "How about checking me on this now? I want to make sure I know the set-up. Bartell and Vasquez planned to make a revolution. Vasquez privately schemed to double-cross Bartell and the copper interests. You, Kranz and Gonzales came to be the Vasquez agents in town, but Kranz put on a double-cross of his own, selling out to Candino. Is that about the size of it?"

"That's it Remember, though that I wasn't interested in Vasquez. I just thought Bartell and his outfit ought to be stopped."

Emery Describes Country Around Mesa Verde

Delaplane stood up suddenly. "I just wanted you to know," he said awkwardly. I was ready to worry it out by myself 'til it looked like Helen Bartell was gettin' involved. I don't like that."

"You don't mind involving Sally Chew," Frazer said.

"Sal's different. She's . . . well . . ." He broke off abruptly and headed for the door.

Frazer let him go.

There was no one on the lower floor of the hotel when Frazer went out, but the street was still full of people. Men were gathered everywhere in tense little groups, all of them clearly alert and ready, waiting for the signal which for some reason had not yet come. Frazer could only hope that the delay was the result of suspicion on the part of Bartell and his cronies. If they suspected the web of intrigue which had enveloped their original plan they might hesitate to start anything.

He found Carson Emery alone and went straight to the point. "It looks like the storm is ready to break, Car. Can you clear me up on a little geography? What's the country like just west of Mesa Verde?"

Emery looked his surprise at the question, but replied without asking any counter questions. "A few ragged hills, pretty much like all of this country down here, but with more mesquite flats tucked among the ridges."

"Any trails through here?"

"Plenty of 'em. That was the section where the first silver strikes were made, before anybody discovered that the copper business was going to be the real thing. Mine roads were cut through in a lot of places."

"Good. Now what about this ranch of Bartell's? Where is it located? To the west?"

"No. That's about due north of here. Maybe seven or eight miles."

"Any other ranches near there?"

"Not a one. Why?"

"Two reasons. I'm trying to get an idea about how Miss Bartell is situated at the ranch, and I'm trying to narrow the field a little in locating Bartell's munitions."

Emery stared. "I don't . . ."

"In a minute. Now what about the country east of town? Any mines in that direction? Or trails?"

"Nothin' but rocks. Old lava beds. The mine strikes have been west and south. But what's . . .?

"I figure it this way. There's one lead that makes it look as though the guns were hidden somewhere to the west. Naturally Bartell had to hide his stuff where it would be accessible and yet safe from detection. That means some remote place that is still close to Mesa Verde and close to the border, some place that has a trail to it that wagons could use. The stuff had to be carted there in the first place, and it has to be on tap for a hurry call."

Emery rubbed his chin thoughtfully. "Well, there's only one main trail outa town, but it branches into a regular tangle after you hit the first hills. There's a regular road across to the Blue Bell workin'. That's because they're still takin' out ore. There's almost as good a trail that leads up past the Maggie and over to the Little Bear."

Frazer jumped to his feet, but his sudden excitement was quickly smothered as boot heels pounded on the hard-packed ground outside.

"The Little Bear!" he repeated, keeping his voice low but intense. "Just remember that if anything happens to me."

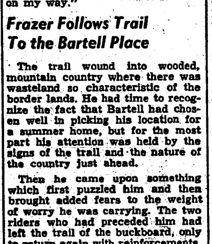
There was no chance for Emery to ask questions or for Frazer to explain. Deputy Ed Delaplane came through the doorway with a rush that advertised the urgency of his errand. "Hell to pay, Frazer!" he blurted. "They've started."

"Who's started what?" Frazer snapped as Emery came out of his chair with a leap.

"Snagg and Jess Ames are headin' outa town. They must have saddled up while I was talkin' to you. Kranz won't open his trap about it, but that's a giveaway in itself. He knows I'm kinda soft on Helen Bartell, and he don't figure to let me know that he's sendin' anybody out after her."

"Hey! What's all this?" Emery wanted to know.

"Tell him, Ed," Frazer commanded, heading for the door. "I'm on my way."



"Look like we got callers, Miss Helen," he greeted. "I don't like the looks o' things too much. Any guns on hand?"

Frazer Follows Trail To the Bartell Place

The trail wound into wooded, mountain country where there was wasteland so characteristic of the border lands. He had time to recognize the fact that Bartell had chosen well in picking his location for a summer home, but for the most part his attention was held by the signs of the trail and the nature of the country just ahead.

Then he came upon something which first puzzled him and then brought added fears to the weight of worry he was carrying. The two riders who had preceded him had left the trail of the buckboard, only to return again with reinforcements.

He hesitated momentarily, then sent his mount into the side trail which must lead to the outlaw camp. Even at the expense of a few minutes' delay it might be worth while to have the extra information. Certainly he did not want to go forward without knowing that his rear was clear of enemies.

Less than a hundred feet from the trail he found the camp site. A fire still smoked, even though it had been recently wet down and everything pointed to a hasty departure. He was already turning his mount when he saw something which caught his attention. Lying beneath a tree was a length of material which showed dark stains. A wounded man had been there, and he had recently had a change of bandages.

The trail rounded a bend of the valley and he could see that it was not far to where the lowland narrowed into a canyon. He halted to survey the scene carefully, and as he did so his alert ear caught the flat bang of a gunshot. It seemed to come from somewhere above the canyon he was inspecting, and he estimated it to be not more than a quarter mile distant.

He put spurs to his bronc and drove headlong into the lower valley, the sound of clattering hoofs under him almost covering the sound of a second gunshot. Black fear rolled into his mind as he contemplated the meaning of those two shots. No one was putting up much of a defense with no more shooting than that. The prospect was more ominous than he liked to think about.

The thought did not distract him from the knowledge that he proposed to finish the job. The shooting was not far ahead now, and once he caught a glimpse of a long, rambling log house on the mountainside. Accordingly he dismounted, tied his pony to a tree and slipped forward on foot. Maybe he would be able to take the outlaws in the rear and save the defenders some nasty moments.

Helen Bartell did not utter a word for a full half hour after leaving Mesa Verde. She was angry at her father, angry at herself and a little more than angry at Dan Frazer. It hurt her pride to realize that she had acted from jealous impulse, and it irked her to know that he must have so interpreted her action. More than that, however, she was disguted at the knowledge that this tall stranger had fallen so quickly into the toils of Sally Chew. The combination of injured pride, remorse and plain indignation made her a morose companion for the bronzed prospector who drove the team.

Helen Realizes She Has Acted Jealously

Then she threw off the mood, on the surface, at least, and began to talk. "Don't mind if I'm pretty quiet, mister," she announced. "I'm still not too happy about coming out here. I suppose it's for the best but . . . By the way, what's your name? In all the excitement I didn't think to ask you last night."

The prospector twisted his brown wrinkles into genial grin. "Wenslow," he replied cautiously. "Buttermilk Wenslow."

"That's an odd one. Is Buttermilk your real name or is it just one of those things that happen to people out here?"

He grinned again. "Just a handle. They hung that on me because o' my drinkin' habits. It's about the only thing I ain't been knowed to swaller."

He seemed to realize that she was blowing off her anger in conversational steam, and they went on up the trail with the girl doing most of the talking. Buttermilk Wenslow was actually beginning to enjoy himself by the time they had climbed the grade and swung into the narrow level space behind the log house. Even an old man could get a lot of pleasure out of being in the company of a girl like Helen Bartell.

He stabled the team while Helen took over the task of getting herself established, the sounds from the house indicating that Juanita was a little embarrassed that her mistress should have arrived to find Miguel doing nothing to earn his wages. Wenslow chuckled to himself and kept out of sight until matters had quieted down, then he moved across toward the house.

It was then that he saw the flicker of movement down the valley. There were riders on the back trail. For a moment he wondered if that tall young fellow had decided to follow Helen Bartell, but then he knew that no swain would come on such errand with so much company. There must have been three or four men down the valley.

Showing surprising agility for a man of his years he dashed into the ranch house, keeping his voice surprisingly calm. "Looks like we got callers, Miss Helen," he greeted. "I don't like the looks o' things too much. Any guns on hand?"

She stared in some surprise. "What do you mean?"

"Jest what I said. I spotted three-four men down the valley and headin' this way. Any rifles around?"

"But what makes you think they would be dangerous?"

"Everybody's dangerous around these parts. Anyhow that big feller told me to take good care o' you. Where's a gun that'll amount to somethin'? I never could hit nothin' with one o' these here hawglegs."

The two strangers were within a hundred feet of the house when the smaller man made a quick gesture to his wounded companion. Instantly Wenslow raised his rifle and yelled, "Pull up right there, compadres. There's a slug fer any waddy that gits too close."

Out of the corner of his tense mouth he muttered to Helen Bartell, "It's the little left-handed jasper. I reckon you know him, don't you?"

The girl stared in some surprise. "I don't know him at all," she denied. "Why did you stop them? That man is wounded and needs help."

Wenslow had no opportunity to explain. Already the little man was shouting a complaint. "Yo' hadn't ought hold us up like this, mister. My pardner's been shot. Ain't yo' goin' to give us a bit o' help?"

"We'll help them," Helen Bartell said swiftly.

"We ain't doin' nothin' o' the kind," Wenslow retorted grimly. "That big jigger told me to look out sharp for a little left-handed critter. And I'm lookin' out." He raised his voice to demand, "Who else is with you?"

Real Estate Bargains Awaited Early Settlers

Peter Minuit's famous $24 purchase of Manhattan Island is only one example of the good "buys" available when the country was young.

Director Minuit's successor, Wouter Van Twiller, also got his money's worth when he gave a band of Indians about $1.65 worth of presents in exchange for 172-acre Governor's Island in New York Harbor. Staten Island, too was bought from Indians in 1631 for "certain parcels of goods."

Christopher Columbus started it all with an investment in ships estimated by various authorities at from $16,000 to $75,000, of which Columbus himself is said to have contributed the equivalent of $2,000.

William Penn received in 1861 almost all of the present state of Pennsylvania as payment for a loan of 16,000 British pounds made by his father, Admiral Sir William Penn, to King Charles II of England. At current exchange rates, this sum amounts to $44,800. In later years his descendants were paid eight times that much by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania for their interests and were permitted to keep their private estates. Penn also was required to pay the king two beaver skins on January 1 each year, plus one-fifth of all gold and silver ore found within his territory.

For the province of Maryland, Lord Baltimore had to deliver two Indian arrows yearly to Windsor Castle, plus a fifth of gold and silver ores.

Early transactions shifted ownership of the present state of New Jersey several times. Charles II originally granted the area to his brother, the Duke of York, who deeded it to John Lord Berkeley and Sir George Carteret as joint proprietors. In 1674 Berkeley sold West Jersey for 1,000 pounds ($2,800) to two Quakers named John Fenwick and Edward Byllings. The executors of Carteret's will sold East Jersey at public auction in 1682 to William Penn and a number of associates for 3,400 pounds ($9,520).

Half interest in the state of Maine, as represented by a royal grant to Sir Ferdinando Gorges, was bought from his heirs by the state of Massachusetts in 1677 for 1,250 pounds ($3,500).

When the United States bought Louisiana Territory from Napoleon in 1803, the country got a lot for its money. The price of $15,000,000 averaged out to less than three cents an acre for the 827,000 square miles. Subsequently, the Federal Government paid nearly a billion dollars to compensate Indian tribes for their lands in the territory.

Here is what she says: "I had been feeling run-down for some time. I just didn't seem to have enough energy and strength to keep going. Then a few months ago I started taking HADACOL. It seemed that in just a short time I was feeling better. I no longer felt so run-down — had so much energy. My weight has evened and I feel just fine. I have continued taking HADACOL and know that it has certainly helped me."

HADACOL makes it possible to actually relieve the REAL CAUSE of a run-down condition, lack of energy and strength when due to the lack of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron in the system.

FERTILIZERS are still the "cheapest crop producer per dollar invested" among various production items the farmer buys, according to a recent statement by Michigan farm economists.

These specialists point out that efficient, high crop production per acre is the key to maintaining farm profits and keeping costs low. Fertilizer use is an essential factor in such a program.

A recent statement in Michigan Farm Economics, published by Michigan State College's department of agricultural economics, lists these steps for building efficient production per acre: (1) A good crop rotation that improves soil tilth and increases the organic matter supply; (2) Keeping output costs low by buying production items that are relatively cheap. Fertilizer is still the cheapest crop producer per dollar invested; (3) Putting the emphasis on cash crops that use more machinery and less hand labor.

Wheat for Breakfast

Wheat made its debut as a breakfast cereal when the caveman found wild wheat growing as he prowled his way through the primitive world. A tentative tasting of the kernels of the wild wheat converted him into a cereal eater, and it turned him into a farmer, too. So well did the caveman like the wild wheat that he stored it against the winter's [illegible]

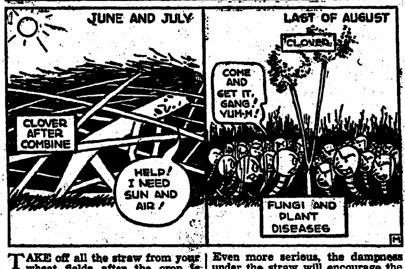
Removing Straw from Harvested Wheat Fields Boosts Hay Production from Legume Seedings



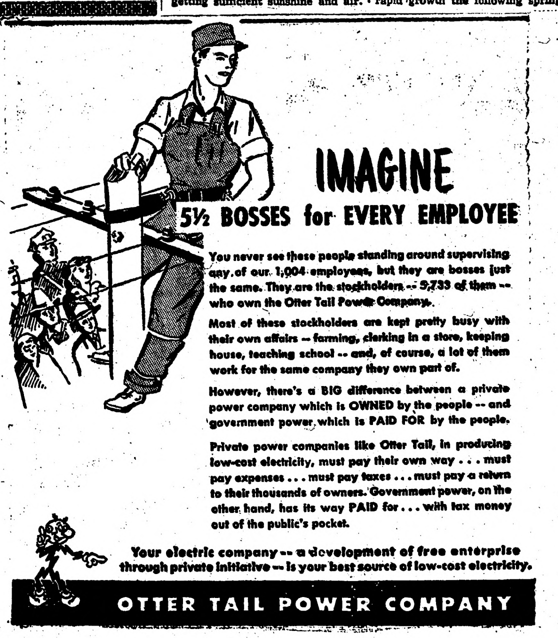
TAKE off all the straw from your wheat fields after the crop is combined if you want to help new legume seedings live through the winter and boost hay yields next year, advise Ohio State University agronomists.

These specialists also recommend pasturing or mowing legume growth for hay, as a means of preventing excess dead material next year.

When you combine wheat or other small grains, half or more of the straw is left in the field. Unless it is promptly clipped and hauled off, it will prevent alfalfa, red clover, Ladino and pasture grasses from getting sufficient sunshine and air. Even more serious, the dampness under the straw will encourage the development of fungus and molds that will destroy the legume growth.

In some years, legume stands have been completely killed over the winter by failure to take off the straw and stubble, according to Ohio tests. In other fields, red clover yields have been almost doubled by removing the straw.

The agronomists recommend that new legume seedings should not be cut or pastured after September 10. The legumes need the fall months to store up the plant food in their roots needed for life during the winter and rapid growth the following spring.



You never see these people standing around supervising any of our 1,004 employees, but they are bosses just the same. They are the stockholders -- 9,733 of them -- who own the Otter Tail Power Company.

Most of these stockholders are kept pretty busy with their own affairs -- farming, clerking in a store, keeping house, teaching school -- and, of course, a lot of them work for the same company they own part of.

However, there's a BIG difference between a private power company which is OWNED by the people -- and government power which is PAID FOR by the people.

Private power companies like Otter Tail, in producing low-cost electricity, must pay their own way . . . must pay expenses . . . must pay taxes . . . must pay a return to their thousands of owners. Government power, on the other hand, has its way PAID for . . . with tax money out of the public's pocket.

Your electric company -- a development of free enterprise through private initiative -- is your best source of low-cost electricity.

LITTLE BUSINESS, BIG LOSSES FORCE GREAT NORTHERN TO ASK DISCONTINUANCE OF TRAINS

Within the next few days Great Northern Railway will petition the Minnesota Railroad and Warehouse Commission for authority to discontinue operation of passenger trains Nos. 135 and 136.

These trains now are operated between Crookston and Warroad on a daily-except-Sunday basis.

Great Northern proposes no change in its freight services between Crookston and Warroad. The railway will arrange for handling of express shipments by the daily local freight train. The Post Office Department has advised the railway that it will arrange for mail service to points now served by trains Nos. 135 and 136.

Great Northern feels that its patrons and the public generally along the Crookston-Warroad line are entitled to know why the railway seeks authority to discontinue the operation of trains Nos. 135 and 136.

A substantial reason is that the operation of these trains has resulted in only large and discouraging losses annually for the past several years—patronage lost to private automobiles and other highway transportation.

Great Northern is prepared to show the Minnesota Railroad & Warehouse Commission that:

- In 1920, prior to construction of the all-weather highway which parallels this line, trains Nos. 135 and 136 carried 88,181 passengers, and revenue from this service was $110,070 that year.
- Last year trains Nos. 135 and 136 carried only 5,733 passengers, and Great Northern received only $5,616 from this service.
- Between 1920 and 1950 there was a 93 per cent decrease in the number of passengers carried on trains Nos. 135 and 136.
- For every mile these trains were operated in 1920 there was an average of 44 passengers aboard as compared with an average of 3 passengers in 1950. Patronage for the first four months of 1951 has averaged slightly more than 2 passengers for every mile these trains have operated.
- For each dollar of passenger service revenue (including mail, express and milk) from operation of trains Nos. 135 and 136 in the first four months of 1951 Great Northern paid out $2.20 in expenses.

The enormous and continuing increases in the cost of providing railway transportation have led the Interstate Commerce Commission and the United States Department of Agriculture to repeatedly urge discontinuance of branch line passenger services which consistently have produced only large out-of-pocket losses.

No enterprise—grocery store, grain elevator, implement business or farming—can successfully withstand continuous losses from operations. The same economic laws apply to the railway business.

X-Ray Probes Woods

The X-ray can now be used to find defects in logs and heavy timbers which are hidden from the naked eye by the bark and outer wood. Once the defects are located, the sawmill operator can thus use the log to best advantage.

THE STORY SO FAR: Attempting to find meaning in Archie Scott's cryptic message, "The Little Bear," which is supposed to indicate the location of a vital store of illegal arms and ammunition, Dan Frazer goes to talk with Marshal Emery. He asks Emery about the physical layout of the country surrounding the copper mining town of Mesa Verde. Emery describes trails and casually happens to mention The Little Bear mine. Frazer knows then that this, at last, is the hiding place of the munitions. Delaplane enters to announce that Kranz and his band have left town. Frazer sets out in the direction of the Bartells' house in the country where Helen had gone.

CHAPTER XV

"Nobody."

"See?" the prospector grunted. "He's lyin'. I know I seen a couple more riders down there." Again he raised his dry old voice to warn the restless intruder. "Jest keep on ye way, brother. This is one time ye ain't sneakin' in to shoot nobody. Take your pard and git goin.' My finger's awful itchy." At his side Helen Bartell took a quick breath. "I believe you're right," she whispered excitedly. "That's the man who killed the stagecoach passenger."

"Not me," Wenslow disclaimed, sighting steadily over the Winchester's sights. "I ain't the one what's right; it's that big galoot who was up to your place this mornin.' He's the one said to watch out for these hombres."

A rifle cracked from the distant trees, its slug imbedding itself in the timbers of the house just an instant before the pair on the porch could hear the report. Wenslow replied with a quick shot directed at the spot where the two riders had disappeared into the brush, then he broke for the door, pullin the girl along with him.

Helen and Wenslow Begin Their Defense

Still there did not seem to be any sign of an enemy on the slope. The rattle of shots still sounded from the south side and once there was a quick clamor of voices. Someone had yelled in pain or alarm and the deep-voiced man had shouted an order. After that the shooting picked up in tempo, but still nothing developed on the north side.

Then Helen Bartell came in, visibly excited. "There's somebody else down there," she blurted. "They're still shooting—but no bullets are striking the house. Either they're fighting among themselves or they've been attacked by a third party."

When Dan Frazer left his horse and plunged toward the sound of the firing he was fully aware of the risks he ran. Those gunmen ahead of him were working on the supposition that Helen Bartell had in her possession a gun containing a dummy shell. It would make no difference to them whether they took the gun from a living person or a dead one. There would be no parleys or surrenders in this war. It was going to be a case of kill or be killed.

A man yelled an order then, and Frazer knew that this was quite a gathering of thugs ahead of him. That voice was the same voice he had heard when the stage was held up. The leader here was the man who had directed that first murder from his point of vantage on the rocks.

He could not hear the words, but it seemed clear that the man was issuing orders for the next stage of the siege. Accordingly Frazer moved forward a little more rapidly, trying to close in while the outlaws were interested in what their leader was telling them. The haste nearly proved fatal. He ducked through a cover of overhanging pine and almost ran into a man who was running toward him.

There was a split second of amazed recognition, and then the other man threw up his gun which he had been carrying in his one good hand. Frazer's weapon was just as prompt, but he retained his coolness long enough to make sure of his shot. The man ahead of him was the fellow he had wounded last night, the murderer of Archie Scott. That was enough to make him grim and deadly. He heard the outlaw's gun explode, but he never knew whether the bullet went close to him or not. He was intent only on squeezing the trigger of his Colt while its sights were lined steadily on the killer's chest.

Then the man was down and Frazer was leaping for cover, aware of the uproar which the two shots had caused. For the split second of the actual shooting he had moved in something like a dream, but the savage anger passed and he became the cautious stalker once more. Squaring accounts with one dirty murderer was not going to end this deal. There were four more of them just ahead, and their yells indicated that they knew something had happened to their companion.

Again he shifted position, waiting for some sound that would locate the enemy, but the only telltale noise was a crashing of brush farther up the hillside. Instantly he knew that he was going to be up against some smart strategy. His adversaries were already trying to surround him.

Dan turned to slip back toward the spot where he had left his bronco, but a pair of quick shots forced him to stand and give battle. So that was the plan! Two of the outlaws were stalking him closely, ready to fire at any indication of movement, while the other two circled to cut him off.

It didn't leave him very much choice, so he took the gamble which seemed to offer the best chance of success. It was time to attack while the enemy was divided. He slid forward again, picking his cover as he moved toward the ranch house. Almost immediately a bullet barked a tree just above his head and he took a fast shot at something which moved among the pines. This time his shot brought a cry of pain and he went in more savagely, aware that his only chance was to dispose of the pair before the flankers could close in on him.

He raced toward the sound of the guns, almost immediately sighting the diminutive form of Jack Snagg.

A bullet ripped a furrow in the slack of his shirt, but running footsteps told him that the gunman had retreated. It was the heavy voice against that yelled, "Back this way, Snagg! Here he is!"

Even as he recognized the plan that his unconscious mind was formulating he saw that it wasn't going to work. He had maneuvered back to the edge of the clearing and there was just a glimpse of a big man diving into cover among the trees. A quick shot from the outlaw told Frazer what he had to face now. That hidden renegade could cover the open ground and hold him here until the flankers came up. Dan was in a pretty nasty sort of trap.

Frazer Is Wounded In Duel With Snagg

There was a shout from the man ahead and then Frazer was charging toward him at a dead run. Instantly the forest clattered under the din of gunfire, guns, hammering from several directions. He knew that a slug grazed his thigh, but he did not falter. There was no time to look around; his sole objective at the moment was the burly outlaw behind the tree just in front of him.

Dan's wild charge seemed to disconcert the man, who sprang to his feet. Instantly Frazer slid to a halt, bringing his sights careful in the moment of stopping. Again he steeled himself to shoot deliberately, making his aim perfect instead of wasting the lead through haste. As with Scott's killer, the grim strategy paid off. He saw his man go sprawling to the ground, but even as he swung to face his other enemies he knew they were having troubles of their own. That firing from the rear had not been directed at him. Not since the first shot while he was on the ground had he been conscious of a bullet coming near him. Someone had entered the fight and was taking the attention of the surviving outlaws.

He raced back toward the sound of the guns, almost immediately sighting the diminutive form of Jack Snagg behind an outcropping of rock. The little gunman recognized Frazer at the same moment and there was another one of those split second duels. For the third time Frazer gambled on giving the enemy the first shot, sighting grimly instead of letting the urgency of the moment drive him into unwise haste. This time he paid a heavier cost. Snagg's bullet seared along his ribs, bringing pain that was almost unbearable.

He fought off the shock of it and held steadily on his target as he pulled the trigger. There was a moment in which he could not be sure just what was happening in front of him. His eyes did not seem to focus properly any more and he fired again, blindly this time even though something in his mind told him that Snagg was down. After that he lost control of the few clear ideas which had remained to him, and he realized that he was sinking to his knees.

When Dan's head cleared he was down on all fours, his gun still clenched in his fist. Numbing pain still clawed at his left side, but he knew what he was doing. He had to get up and reload. Somewhere here in this woodland was another enemy.

A twig snapped on the upper hillside and as he shifted painfully to face the threat he heard a thin voice that sounded vaguely familiar.

"Don't bang away, pard. I'm comin' in."

It was then that another voice broke in, this time from another quarter. "The fight is over," came the announcement. "Two more I have shot. If that is all we do not have any fear now."

"Hey! What's all this?" Frazer grunted. "I thought I was shootin' this out alone. Who busted in on the scrap?"

Wenslow was staring suspiciously toward the unseen voice. "I didn't get into it," he growled. "Musta been this other gent. Hello! Come out and let's take a look at ye."

Gonzales Reveals Self As Third Man in Fight

The pine boughs parted and a slight figure stepped into view. Frazer let out a grunt of pain and surprise. "Gonzales! What are you doing here?"

The little Mexican smiled quietly. "I am the suspicious one," he confessed. "This morning I hear about a bullet which is important to many people. I know you have visited Senor Bartell and I think you have it. Then the men who claim to be my friends think different. When my back is turned they send some of their number out here in a hurry. I think I should come and see what happens. I do not like my friends to deceive me."

Frazer knitted his brows perplexedly. "So what's your pitch, Gonzales? Did you shoot that lanky jasper?"

"And Senor Snagg. I can but credit you with the final touch. Already I have wounded Snagg."

Frazer swayed dizzily, fighting off the blackness as the two men helped him to his feet. Then he took a fresh lease on life and stepped out a little more steadily. "Let me walk," he insisted. "We'll do better that way, I'm not so bad off."

"It's a nasty wound," Wenslow reminded him. "We'll give you an arm anyway."

It was only when immediate needs were attended to that anyone brought up the subject of the battle. Then it was Helen Bartell who asked the question. "Who were those men, and what did they mean by attacking us?"

Frazer started to reply, but the little Mexican interrupted smoothly. "You must rest, my friend," he said with the utmost politeness—and a notable lack of the accent which had marked his speech last evening. "It is better that I tell. The lady knows the plans of her father?" Frazer decided that Gonzales turned his accent off and on at will. The man actually spoke excellent English.

Helen nodded. "I know. But what does this have to do with my father?"

The little man's eyes twinkled briefly as he stole a glance at Frazer. "Perhaps you do not know that two governments are interested in those plans your own government sent two men to investigate. One of them learned something of importance, but was killed before he could report. The other one is our wounded compadre here."

She turned to stare at Frazer. "Then you're really a goverment agent?"

He shook his head slightly. "I'm not telling the yarn. This is the Gonzales version you're hearing."

"Very well. We know then that Senor Bartell's plan was under scrutiny by two governments. Also it became the center of what you call the great doublecross. One Vasquez, pretending to work with the Bartell people, secretly planned to betray them and take everything for himself. Still another Mexican, one Candino, planned an even more complicated betrayal. Both men found it easy to place their agents in Mesa Verde where they could become familiar with the plans of Senor Bartell."

"I notice you're not advertising your own connection," Frazer said significantly."

"Have you done so? No. Then I keep my own consel for the present."

Better Bees on Way

Bees that sting less, gather more honey and resist disease soon will be available as a result of new discoveries in breeding. Applying methods used in artificially breeding dairy cows and in producing hybrid corn, scientists have found ways to control queen mating. Thereby they are working to produce superior honeymakers—bees not so anxious to sting and willing to work harder. They will also produce better pollinizers and bees more resistant to foulbrood.

JOHN STEEN of Worthington, Minnesota, left Germany for America in 1925 . . . today runs a thriving 190-acre grain farm just outside the "Turkey Capital of the World." Mr. Steen lives about as far from the Mesabi as any Minnesotan. Yet when asked if the iron mining industry is a good thing for Minnesota, he said: "Definitely—it's a big employer and a big customer of the whole state." Nine out of ten state residents agree, according to a statewide public opinion survey of 2,881 other representative Minnesotans.

"Is the iron mining industry a good thing for Minnesota?"

SURVEY FINDINGS:

96% of Minnesota citizens say YES ("provides jobs", "develops resources") . . . 4% say NO ("depletes resources", "leaves the state with holes in the ground"). WHO'S RIGHT?

One way to get the right slant on Minnesota's iron mining industry is to take one real mine and see what it's meant to you.

Take, for example, the Missabe Mountain Mine at Virginia, one of the first iron mines operated in Minnesota. It was State school land. It is now almost out of good ore, after 55 years. Some ore remains, but, for argument, call it "mined out"—just a 160-acre "hole in the ground."

$43,000,000 Story

This "hole" has produced more than iron ore: in royalties, in occupation taxes, and in general property taxes, it has paid $43.7 million to the State of Minnesota and to the village, school district and county. Not bad for a "hole in the ground"!

But wait: since this was State school land, all the royalties from this mine, plus half of the occupation taxes, have gone into the State's permanent school trust fund. Under the Constitution, this money, $28.2 million, will be part of this fund for all time. If Minnesota gets a 2½% return on trust fund moneys, this "hole" will be paying to Minnesota's school districts—yours included—$705,000 a year for all time. Pretty helpful "hole in the ground"!

Big Employer, Big Customer

Yet this mine has meant more than tax revenue. For 55 years it has employed hundreds of breadwinners who have raised families, bought things you may make or sell, paid taxes themselves. And the mine itself has bought vast amounts of materials and supplies from Minnesota businesses of many kinds.

Of course the Missabe Mountain Mine is but one of hundreds of Minnesota iron mines, and its contribution to your state and community is a pittance compared with what the whole industry has contributed.

Happy Ending?

There can be a happy ending to the story. Minnesota's ore industry can continue to provide jobs, stimulate business and turn out the iron ore America needs, if given the cooperation of Minnesota people. The ore producers, hoping to invest up to $400 million in low-grade and taconite ore processing plants, ask only that they get the same kind of tax treatment other Minnesota industries get. If they do, Minnesota can be assured of a permanent mining industry.

FIRST AID TO THE AILING HOUSE

BY ROGER C. WHITMAN

Question: The woodwork in my home was originally stained gumwood. I sandpapered the stain as best I could and painted it with semi gloss white paint. I find that the white paint keeps chipping off. Would you advise me to sand it off or use paint remover? What should I use for an undercoat to keep it from chipping? Would aluminum paint be all right for an undercoat?

Answer: Aluminum paint makes a very good priming coat, or you could use two coats of enamel undercoater and then a coat of enamel. To remove the chipping paint, try to get a small, portable electric sander, which would save time and labor. You could also soften the paint with paint remover and then scrape it off. Follow by thorough cleaning with turpentine, for if every trace of remover is not washed off, it will continue its action and spoil the new paint.

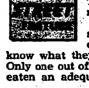
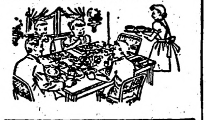
Skimping on Breakfast Causes Morning Restlessness, Fatigue

Community programs have long had their roots in the traditions of every village, town and city of America. From the village square of earlier days, from the community councils and committees of today, we have a proud heritage of achievement in working together on community programs whose objectives have always been for the betterment of all the people of the community.

The month of September presents another opportunity for this community — newspaper, merchants, school and health officials, town councils and other—to band together in the cause of a program that will benefit the whole community. September is Better Breakfast Month. There is a real need for it.



If you don't think so, ask any 20 children you happen to know what they had for breakfast. Only one out of every four will have eaten an adequate breakfast.



Family breakfasts begin a better day

Teachers in 45 states responded to a recent survey covering 48,949 students. Their replies showed that 32,213 students ate inadequate breakfasts and 16,736 adequate breakfasts—or two-thirds of this national cross section of students in the home towns of America did not have good breakfasts.

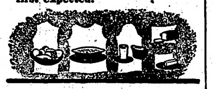
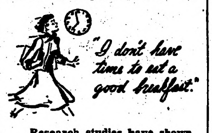
From this survey educators concluded that much of the morning fatigue, restlessness and inability to concentrate noted in classrooms is due to breakfast skipping or skimping. This problem of better breakfasts, therefore, assumes greater importance for the individual families of this community than first expected.



A basic breakfast pattern.

There are many reasons why so many people don't eat breakfast. There's the familiar cry of "I'm not hungry," "I don't have time to eat a good breakfast," "Isn't breakfast fattening?" But much of the cause can be blamed on the fact that homemakers do not realize the importance of breakfast to the human body.

From many standpoints, breakfast is the most important meal of the day. The body has been without food for 10 to 12 hours and should be supplied with nutrients needed for the morning's activities.



"I don't have time to eat a good breakfast."

Research studies have shown that many persons whose breakfast is inadequate or skipped, fail to obtain the necessary daily food intake. An adequate breakfast should supply one-fourth to one-third of the day's total requirements.

The improvement of breakfast eating habits is an essential service to the community.

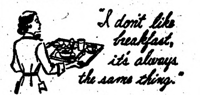
Leading educators, physicians, and city, state, and government nutrition authorities have watched the neglect of breakfast mount over the years. These leaders say that it is time to educate the children and their families on the important part the adequate breakfast plays in the nation's aim for better nutrition and in the community welfare.

Better breakfast habits can be taught in several ways: as part of nutrition education in health, science, and homemaking classes; and in school-wide breakfast programs. And it can be taught on a community-wide good breakfast program under the guidance of recognized authorities in nutrition and health services.

The community program could be sponsored by a merchants association, a public utility, Parent-Teacher Associations, women's clubs, chambers of commerce, or other civic organizations.



"I don't like breakfast, it's always the same thing."

Educational materials and other cooperative service may be obtained free by communicating with the U.S. department of agriculture, extension departments of state universities, state department of public health, research and educational organizations in the food industry, and consumer service departments of large food companies.

The local group desiring to sponsor a better breakfast program can obtain educational material free of charge by writing the Cereal Institute, Inc., 135 South LaSalle Street, Chicago 3, Ill.

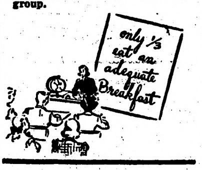
Results of nation-wide surveys and scientific research indicate the need of better breakfast habits in the home town of the country. Here are the survey findings:

Children: One out of every five children goes to school with a poor breakfast.

Girls: Sixty per cent of teenage girls habitually eat a breakfast entirely inadequate for their physical needs.

Boys: Twice as many older teen-age boys have poor breakfast eating habis when compared to younger teen-age group.



only 1/3 eat an adequate Breakfast

Women: Only about 40 per cent of the women report they have good breakfasts.

Men: Only 56 per cent of the men say they have good breakfasts.

Industrial Workers: An industrial survey discloses the greatest number of accidents occurred in the last hour before lunch, and that a large majority of the injured had come to work without an adequate breakfast.

Teachers: Seventy-five per cent of elementary and high school principals and teachers are in agreement that breakfast is most apt to be the neglected meal by the students and say it is a serious problem, having a definite effect upon the students' work.

"Isn't sleep more important than breakfast?"

Doctors: Sixty-eight per cent of the doctors say the average person eats too little for breakfast and 75 per cent of them think the average breakfast is poorly balanced.

Uncle Sam: The U.S. bureau of human nutrition and home economics says: "It has been found that workers who skip breakfast get less done in the first morning hours than those who tuck away a good breakfast before work."

Teachers, Students Put Over Program

School, home, and community better breakfast programs have been conducted from coast to coast during the past five years. All such programs have developed as a result of local surveys indicating the need for them. Home economic teachers and students have played an integral part in the success of almost every program.

National surveys reveal that breakfast, among both school students and adults, frequently is the neglected meal. Health education programs in elementary schools, and junior and senior high schools have stressed the importance of breakfast as a part of the course.

With the opening of school for the 1951-52 term, the community that needs a better breakfast program will find help in conducting such a program from home economic teachers and students. Nutrition and its importance is a lesson well worth teaching.

Our County Nurse Says

Minnesota has been fortunate so far this summer - there have been very few cases of poliomyelitis. But we must remember that polio may strike anywhere, at any time, and we do not yet know how to prevent it

We do know several ways to lessen the bad effects of polio. Our State Health Department joins with the National Foundation in recommending the following precautions:

1. Be alert for signs of illness-headache, sore throat, fever, upset stomach, sore muscles, stiff neck and back, extreme tiredness or nervousness, trouble in breathing or swallowing.
2. Put a sick person to bed at once, away from others, and call a doctor.
3. Practice cleanliness. Wash hands before eating and after using toilet. Keep food clean, cool and covered.
4. Avoid getting overtired.
5. Avoid chilling. Don't swim long in cold water or sit around in a wet bathing suit or in wet clothes.
6. Postpone mouth and throat operations if there is and polio in your neighborhood.

Remember - at least half of all polio patients get well without any crippling. You may help prevent crippling by observing the simple precautions listed above.

NINE-DAY DEER SEASON SET FOR NOV. 17 TO 25

Duck Season Will Be Announced Later Part of Aug. Says Conservation Head

Frank D. Blair, state game and fish director, last week announced Minnesota's 1951 liberalized hunting season, including a nine day deer season, 23 days statewide season on pheasants and Hungarian partridge, 45 days in the northern half of the state on partridge and a 16 day statewide season on sharptailed grouse.

Prairie chickens were kept on the fully protected list, but there will be a 17 day quail season in the five southeastern counties along the Mississippi.

Sharptailed Grouse season opens September 20 and closes October 14 and is state wide. Limit, four daily and eight in possession.

According to the announcement by Blair, the deer season for bow and arrow will open October 11th and close on October 31st. A $3.50 special license is required for bow and arrow hunters. The regular season for taking deer with rifles and shotguns will open November 17 and will be open thru November 25th.

Pheasant hunting will open Oct. 27th and close November 18. This season is also state wide with a limit of three cocks daily and six in possession.

Ruffed grouse, (partridge) open through November 12th in the northern zone. Limit five daily and ten in possession.

In announcing the seasons, Blair said "The season and regulation for hunting waterfowl is set by the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service and will be announced as soon as they are received from federal authorities." This likely will be around the last week in August. Mr. Blair also stressed the point, that statewide seasons does not permit hunting in cities or villages, or in game refuges except where specified.

Resident deer licenst fee with firearms will be $3.50; with bow and arrow $3.50. Small game license is $2.00 and duck stamp $2.00. A full detailed schedule of hunting regulations will be published in this paper as soon as received from the Director of Game and Fish.

BY E. E. HALLERAN

THE STORY SO FAR: Dan Frazer has discovered that the munitions are hidden in The Little Bear mine. Simultaneously, the German, Kranz, who is in league with the Mexican bandit, Candino, sets out with his gang for Helen Bartell's house in the hills, thinking she unknowingly possesses a message giving the location of the arms store which he also wants. Frazer rides after them and comes upon them laying siege to the Bartell house where Helen and Wenslow are holding out. He attacks savagely, killing several men before he is wounded himself. Then two men come to his aid—Wenslow and Gonzales, who had appeared to be in league with Kranz.

CHAPTER XVI

"Stop sparring and get down to business," Helen Bartell said impatiently. "Who were these men who attacked us, and what did they want?"

"Pardon." Gonzales was all politeness again. "I did but joust with Senor Frazer. We go on with business."

"By all means do."

"Senor Kranz and I came to Mesa Verde to look after the interests of Vasquez. We drew certain citizens into our ranks, notably the deputy marshal. In his position he could be of great help to us. Soon, however, I began to suspect Kranz. Some of the men he was gathering around him were plain cut-throats. I concluded that Kranz had sold out to some other party, probably Candino."

"Leaving only yourself and Delaplane loyal to good old Vasquez," Frazer murmured thoughtfully.

Gonzales nodded and Frazer felt a quick thrill of satisfaction. The man had ticketed himself. Helen Bartell broke in, however, and his thoughts shifted. For the moment he had forgotten the fact that Delaplane had been making a definite play for the blond girl.

"You mean Ed Delaplane was working for Vasquez?" she demanded incredulously.

Gonzales Explains His Part in the Mystery

"Of a certainty. We felt well pleased to enlist his services. He was able to bring us much information direct from your father."

"Then he simply used his visits to me for . . . ?"

"Certainly not," Gonzales insisted, his politeness more marked than ever. "Visiting you gave him the opportunity to speak with your father, but I cannot believe that he visited for that reason alone. No man could be so blind."

Frazer chuckled dryly, amused in spite of his perplexity at the Mexican's attitude. "I subscribe to the sentiment," he announced firmly. "Drive on, Senor."

"Very well. Soon I learned that your government has sent a man to investigate. Kranz learned of it, but did not tell me. So I know that he suspects me or does not want me to know. I also notice then that his friends leave Mesa Verde, but I do not know until later that they have identified the government agent and are watching him. Finally came the events of which you know. The stage is held up and a man is shot down, evidently because he is a second government agent. Shortly after that the first agent is killed by one of Kranz's men. I notice that the killer lies out there by the trail."

Frazer nodded grimly. "I stumbled across him when I was trying to get close to the rest of the crew. We shot it out."

"My congratulations," Gonzales murmured, dismissing the matter with a little shrug. "Then came Snagg to town with word that the government man had found something, evidently the munitions which so many people wanted. It was believed that he had written the secret on a piece of paper which he had concealed in a false cartridge."

"And now comes the merry-go-round," Frazer grunted. "Before Snagg can pass the word to his boss I have picked up the dead man's gun and have gone out to do some shooting, first at the killer and a little later at a man who has some ambitions about shooting Miss Bartell."

Gonzales bowed. "Exactly. For Kranz that is bad enough, but what he does not know is that you leave the gun with Miss Bartell. No one knows about that. We know that you are carrying two guns. One you took from Gale, so the other must be that of the agent. It is not until later that we know of the case of Ames. So efforts are made to get the gun from you."

Helen Bartell's eyes were flashing now. For the first time she was hearing enough of the story so that she could piece together the elements which had left her so completely puzzled. Frazer realized her mood and put in a leading question. "Did you have anything to do with any of those attempts, Senor?"

Gonzales shook his head. "I planned it another way," he said with a smile. "Delaplane tried first on his own account when he attempted the seizure in the bar. It was Delaplane again who sent the red-haired girl to your room. That time I think he was working under the orders of Kranz. Certainly the two of them knew she had gone to make the try."

Helen ignored the remark, her gaze on the Mexican as she asked, "Do I understand that I had a gun which held some sort of secret?"

"You have a gun," he corrected. "I'm quite sure Mr. Frazer did not recover it when he went to your house this morning."

"You will please to hand me that gun," he ordered briskly. "If it will make you feel any better I can tell you that I do not propose to use the information for any purposes but a good one. The Mexican government will merely take steps to protect itself."

"But I don't have the gun," Helen protested. "I returned it to Mr. Frazer early this morning."

"That's correct," Frazer affirmed. "You met me on my second visit. I took the gun away earlier."

The Mexican's gun swung a little, subtly threatening the man on the couch.

Gonzales shook his head. "I planned it another way," he said with a smile.

Frazer shook his head, making no other move. "You're crazy if you think this is getting you anywhere, Gonzales. I won't . . ."

"He can't tell you anything," Helen broke in. "He's just taking your attention away from me. When I returned that gun to him there was a fresh set of cartridges in it. He didn't get any such dummy shell as you're talking about."

Gonzales started, then settled back a little grimly. "Then we start over," he said. "It was you who found the message from the government man?

Frazer Lures Mexican Into Leaving Ranch

"Slow down, mister," she advised, her voice completely cool now that she had taken the center of the stage. "You're jumping at conclusions. I haven't seen any message.

"I looked at the gun shortly after it was given to me—for my protection. It seemed rather odd that I should have been provided with such a lame weapon. It contained one bullet, four empty cases and a shell which held a bullet, but whose primer was dented. For safety's sake I threw out all of the old loads and put in five brand new shells."

"So that's what happened!" Frazer exclaimed. "No wonder I couldn't figure out what you did with the confounded thing."

Evidently he made the remark convincing. At any rate Gonzales stood up promptly, putting his gun away. "That is all I need to know," he announced. "Forgive me if I bid you adios rather hastily. There is still time."

Frazer grinned thinly at the girl when the little Mexican was out of hearing. "Cute sense of humor that hombre has," he commented. "I wonder if he was telling us the truth when he said he was working for the Mex government?"

"Would it make any difference?" she asked anxiously.

"Not too much. I did a little garbage can searching myself this morning."

Helen Bartell sat down suddenly in a big armchair. Her short laugh indicated that the tension of the moment was over, but its tones warned that she was far from satisfied about many things. Her glance at Dan was distinctly severe as she demanded, "Who permitted you to rummage around in our garbage? Surely my father wasn't helping anyone to find a betrayal of his secret."

There was a giggle gnawing at the edge of Helen's severe comment about burglary being burglary and he decided that he had adopted the correct approach. Apparently Wenslow felt the same way about it, for he stood up suddenly, fumbling with his hat and winking elaborately at Frazer. "I reckon I oughta git oun there and see what's what," he suggested.

"And look the bodies over," Frazer called after him. "We might learn something."

The girl shuddered at mention of the dead men. "It doesn't seem possible that I've been living through such a nightmare," she said in a troubled voice. "Even when they weer shooting into this house I didn't realize what it all meant. Men have been dying—and all because my father had a scheme that he thought it was a good idea."

"Don't worry about it. Lots of men have cooked up nice sounding schemes that have caused plenty of grief for their friends and neighbors. Maybe we can shut this one off before it gets too bad."

"How?"

"I don't know yet. I'm hoping we'll have time to spike the thing before the worst can happen. For the present your father and his friends are holding up any final movements, probably because they have gotten wind of these cross currents of treachery. If the delay continues—and if no one gets the information that was in the gun—we have a chance to block the game."

Frazer Reveals Guns Are Stored in Mine

"Where is the message that the gun held?"

"In my pocket." He grinned wryly. "Just imagine how our friend Gonzales would feel if he knew how he's been hornswoggled."

She was not to be diverted. "What was the message?"

He pointed to the coat which had been taken off him when the bandaging began. "Look in one of the pockets of that. I don't remember which one."

Wenslow found them smiling but grim when he returned. He concluded that they must have reached some rather amicable agreements, but that both of them were ready to recognize the seriousness of the situation at hand.

"I put all the broncs in the corral," he reported. "There wasn't nothin' on any o' the dead hombres that was much good. Just guns. I brung them along—with the cartridge belts. What's the next step?"

Frazer nodded. "Do you know where the Little Bear mine is located?"

"Sure. It's a dead duck though. Ain't been anything good comin' outa there since the first vein petered out."

"What we're worried about is something dangerous coming out of it," Frazer told him. "It seems pretty certain that the Little Bear is where those filibuster guns are stored. We've got to take some step to make sure that they don't come out. If they do, they'll almost certainly get into the wrong hands—and then we'll have a bloody mess around here."

"How do ye figure that? Couldn't they work out for somethin' useful?"

"You hear the talk with Gonzales," Frazer said, a bit impatiently. "Everything he said was true—unless it was the part about his interest in the deal. If Bartell gives the word to go ahead we'll have a filibuster army marching on the border. Either one of two things will happen. They'll run into Mexican regulars and there will be an international scramble. Or they'll get the Vasquez double-cross and there'll be a massacre. One way or another Mesa Verde will lose a lot of men and gain exactly nothing in return.

"If Bartell's men don't get the munitions out first, but somebody else learns the secret, we'll have an even worse mess. There'll be a race between Candino and Vasquez with a good prospect of a battle between them being fought on this side of the line. That will mean looting, pillage and general murder, particularly if Candino wins."

She shuddered, apparently recognizing the dangers of having such a mob unleashed in the territory. Frazer followed his point up quickly. "The only wonder is that they haven't tried it before this. I'd guess that they've been holding off for more definite information—but now they'll be likely to take the gamble. We've got to move now."

"But what can we do? What can you do? You can't ride a horse while you have that hole in your side."

"Don't worry about me, I'm going to that mine if our friend here will show me the way. After we get there we'll work out a plan."

Wenslow and the girl did not waste any time in getting ready. By mid-afternoon the horses were brought around and Frazer braced himself for the effort of mounting. Every movement brought waves of pain almost nauseated him, and he knew that the jolting ride would probably cause a dangerous loss of blood.

Chemistry Has Changed Life In the Small Towns of America

Chemists and chemical engineers are transforming the life of small towns and rural areas as completely as they are remolding metropolitan city life, Dr. N. Howell Furman, president of the American Chemical Society, reported recently.

"Chemical scientists and technologists serve modern man every moment of his life, wherever he may go," Dr. Furman asserted, outlining the theme of the society's diamond jubilee meeting which will be held in New York September 3-7, and by local sections in all parts of the country during National Chemistry Week, September 2-9.

MAIN STREET FEATURE

When a handful of chemists organized the American Chemical Society in 1876, chemical activity was confined to a few centers, principally in the larger cities. Although they met in a small room they constituted a substantial part of the nation's chemists at that time.

Today the American Chemical Society with 65,000 members is the largest organization of professional scientists in the world. Its 137 sections include membership in every state in the union.

Chemicals have not only become the nation's first industry, Dr. Furman noted, but the tendency of industrial establishments to locate plants near sources of raw materials has led to widespread diffusion of chemical manufacturing and processing. Many new towns and cities formerly rural or even uninhabited areas owe their existence and growth to the expanded activities of chemists and chemical engineers in serving modern civilization.

The profound changes these scientists and engineers have brought about in our daily lives are by no means confined to communities with chemical industries, Dr. Furman observed. The air we breathe, the water we drink, the clothing we wear, the health we enjoy, the cars we drive, the houses we live in and the wide range of objects we use throughout the day all reflect this transformation.

Chlorination of drinking water, for example, is a feature of modern life in the smallest towns as well as the largest cities. Fluoridation of water to prevent tooth decay, especially in growing children, has recently met with medical approval following a five-year test and promises to take its place with chlorination as a public health practice in our cities.

Large cities like Rochester, N.Y., are now fluoridating their water supplies, but Dr. Furman found it significant that the tests were first made in two smaller New York cities, Newburgh and Kingston. Records of tooth decay among children in these adjoining communities during the test period clearly established that the incidence of dental caries, or tooth decay, was less in Newburgh where the water supply was fluoridated than in Kingston, the control community, where there was no fluoridation.

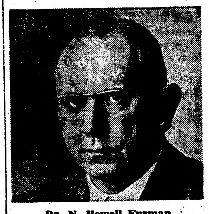
Maysville, a small Kentucky city, was the first in that state to treat its drinking water with fluorides. Dentists at Maysville were chiefly responsible for promoting fluoridation of water. Larger Kentucky cities followed suit.

Life in West Branch, Iowa, three-quarters of a century ago is compared with small town life today by former president Herbert Hoover in his memoirs. The townspeople then churned their own butter and made their own dyes. Many of the necessities of life which people then provided for themselves are now supplied by industries founded on the research and technology of chemists and chemical engineers.

A wide range of products of chemical research and engineering has special importance for the home town dweller and the Main Street businessman. Enjoying more living space than the city dweller, with room for a garden and driveway and with his own roof overhead, he is the particular beneficiary of such products as plant foods, pesticides and roofing materials, to name only a few.

The need for education in science and technology to keep abreast of the expansion of the chemical industry and profession was stressed by Dr. Furman, who is head of the chemistry department at Princeton University.

"Many members of the profession receive their first scientific training in the high schools of our smaller communities," he pointed out. "The American Chemical Society is interested in aiding high school teachers to interest young boys and girls in the profession. Many local sections of the society make a practice of inviting high school students and teachers of chemistry to attend section meetings.



Dr. N. Howell Furman

In addition to reviewing the progress made by chemists and chemical engineers during the past 75 years, Dr. Furman declared, the diamond jubilee observances will focus attention on the prospects for even greater progress in the future.

Since smaller communities will not only benefit from new chemical developments, but will play a substantial part in bringing them about, the American Chemical Society through its local sections will parallel the program of National Chemical Week observances in New York with observances in communities and schools throughout the country.

The week of September 2-9 is the opportune time for the people of America's home towns to learn the fabulous story of chemistry and the vital effect it has had on the ordinary man in his everyday living.

Here again is an opportunity for the local merchant, by exhibits and advertising, to tell the local community a worthwhile story, the story of "Chemistry—Key to Better Living."

Watch Inspection Time Is September 6 to 15

Too often the owner of a fine watch is apt to take his timepiece for granted—and forget to bring it to his good friend, the local jeweler, for a necessary periodical check-up and oiling.

The jewelers of America will be reminding the public of this fact during national Watch Inspection Time, September 6 to 15, and it would be well for the possessor of a quality watch to visit the service department of his community jeweler for the needed timepiece check-up.

Here are a few "do's" and "don'ts" for protection of your watch:

(1) Always take your watch to a quality watch-service department for any necessary adjustment, cleaning or repair.

(2) Insist on genuine factory replacement parts.

(3) Wind it once a day preferably in the morning. And when you wind it, take it off your wrist.

(4) Try not to expose it to extreme hot or cold conditions.

(5) Keep it away from perfume, powder, or loose tobacco crumbs.

(6) And, above all, if the watch should lose its accuracy or stop completely, don't try fixing it yourself. Tinkering with a fine watch movement can be an expensive experiment. Your community's watchmaker makes it his business to nurse watches back to health.

A periodical cleaning of your wristwatch is a "time" saver in two ways. The repairman not only removes any dust or dirt that might have sifted into the movement, but also congealed, dirty oil.

Like any machine, your precious watch movement needs oil—and the right oil—to protect its moving parts against frictional wear. The lack of proper lubrication too often results in this wear, and ultimate inaccuracy or complete stoppage of the movement.

Avoid all possible shocks to your watch. Remember, many an automobile's shock absorbers have been broken when going over a deep rut in the road, and even a "shock-resistant" watch can take just so much out-of-the-ordinary jolting.

When you wind the stem of the timepiece, the action tightens the mainspring, and stores new energy needed to run the watch. Wind it gently with the thumb and finger, and stop when you feel that the tension is at the maximum it can take without damage.

A New Watch?—Ask Your Jeweler's Advice

Are you one of the several million Americans who is a prospective watch buyer this year? If you are, be sure to consult your home town jeweler.

A fine timepiece is like a fine automobile—only an expert really can tell its performance possibilities. And your local jeweler, who has been selling and servicing fine watches for generations, is the best qualified person in your community to rely upon when it comes to the purchase of a watch. He will give you excellent advice.

When selecting a watch, personal preference in style, together with pocketbook capabilities, must first be considered. At that point, however, your jeweler is in a position to help you to select a fine watch which he knows is built to give you accurate, dependable service over the coming years. His store and reputation are the guarantee behind the product he sells.

NO MORE RUN-DOWN FEELING NOW; SHE THANKS HADACOL

HADACOL Relieves Weak, Run-Down Conditions When Due to Deficiencies of Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron

When a person feels tired all the time, is run-down and lacks energy, life just isn't too pleasant. Mrs. Floyd Smith, P. O. Box 623, Tolleson, Arizona, had been feeling that way. Then she heard about HADACOL—how it had been helping folks who were tired, run-down and suffered from a lack of energy when due to deficiencies of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Iron and Niacin in the system. Mrs. Smith decided to try HADACOL, and now says she intends to always have HADACOL on hand.

Here is what she writes: "I have been taking HADACOL for about two months. I had been quite run-down, just didn't have any energy at all. We, my husband and I, had heard so much about HADACOL so we decided to give it a trial. My land, in just a short time I could certainly tell a big improvement. I felt so much stronger—was no longer as tired as I had been. HADACOL has certainly helped me, and I just can't praise it too highly. I'm still taking HADACOL and intend to always have it on hand."

Is it any wonder that Mrs. Smith is going to continue taking HADACOL?

HADACOL makes it possible to actually relieve the REAL CAUSE of that run-down feeling and lack of energy when due to a deficiency of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron in the system.

AND LISTEN TO THIS! Continued use of this great HADACOL not only gives continuous complete relief but helps keep such distress from returning when caused by such deficiencies. Now that's the kind of product folks have been looking for . . . the kind to buy and start taking at once. HADACOL's wonderful Vitamins and Minerals come in liquid form and are quickly absorbed and assimilated in the blood, ready to go to work at once.

HADACOL Is So Effective

Because HADACOL helps build up the hemoglobin content of your blood (when Iron is needed) to carry these precious Vitamins and Minerals to every organ and to every part of your body.

You may have tried other Vitamin preparations or other Vitamin and Mineral preparations, so we make you this offer. Try a bottle of HADACOL today if you need Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron. You be the judge. If you do not believe that HADACOL is the best Vitamin and Mineral preparation you have ever taken, we will gladly send you back your money. That's our positive money-back guarantee. You take no chances.

So be fair to yourself. Don't go through life suffering from a run-down condition and lack of energy when caused by lack of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron, when relief may be as close at hand as your nearest drug store.

Refuse Substitutes

There is only one HADACOL. Don't let anyone tell you something else is "just as good." Insist on genuine HADACOL. You risk nothing because HADACOL is sold on a strict money-back guarantee.

Sold at all drug counters. Trial size, $1.25, but buy the large family-size, only $3.50. If your dealer does not sell HADACOL, order direct from The LeBlanc Corporation, Lafayette, Louisiana.

Otter Tales

By . . . Reddy Kilowatt

Pete LaTourette, the big 6' 8" Otter Tail district manager at Canby, stopped me the other day. (There was nothing else to do but stop, because you can't get around or over Pete—in fact, you can't even see what's on the other side of him.)

"What's the current news, Reddy?" said Pete, laughing like mad at his little joke. Well, I was in no mood for any jokes—I'd just battled my way through a series of July storms, and besides that I'd been insulted a couple hours before.

"Some guy had the nerve to call me a CITY SLICKER," I told Pete. "Imagine that, ME a city slicker! Said I spent most of my time making life easy for town folks—when actually, I've been milking cows, pumping water, grinding feed and brooding baby chicks for so long I feel like a sod-shanty pioneer."

"I guess what you're trying to say," said Pete, "is that even though you were born in the city, you've been hard at work ELECTRIFYING RURAL AREAS for years. And, in case you've forgotten, let me remind you that just 26 years ago, the first rural electric line in the world was built near Red Wing, Minnesota, with funds provided by the Otter Tail Power Company and two other power companies."

"Yeah, I know," I said, "that's why I got so mad when this guy called me a city slicker. I was bringing the comforts of electrical living to farm homes long before anybody ever heard of rural electrification."

Pete had to leave then, but before he went he reminded me that the week of August 26 has been set aside all over the country as "Rural Electrification Week." It's a pretty important week, too, because it marks the near-end of a job that electric companies started and have been working on a long time, in co-operation with local rural electric co-operatives and other agencies. Today, 95 out of every 100 farms in the nation have low-cost electric service available, and I'm pretty proud of myself.

RURAL Electrification
WEEK

Say, before I leave you for another month, Bud Poole (he's Otter Tail's safety director), wanted me to issue a serious note of warning about moving farm equipment such as portable grain elevators, combines, etc., near transmission lines. Electric lines are dangerous—make sure your equipment has plenty of clearance. The line can be replaced—but a human life can't. Reddy Kilowatt

"I Save More Than 4 Hours Every Week Doing My Ironing"...

Says Mrs. Adolph Larson, Warren, Minnesota.

Mrs. Adolph Larson of rural Warren, Minnesota, knows from actual experience how much labor rural electric power can save.

"I actually save MORE than 4 hours every week on ironing with my electric ironer," says Mrs. Larson. "I sure wouldn't be without it."

The Larsons have 7 children — three boys and four girls —and as Mrs. Larson puts it, "With that size family I need all the labor-savers I can find."

There are other things she likes about her electric ironer in addition to the speed. For instance, there's no more standing up to iron — she sits! There's no more laboring over a shirt for 10 minutes, "I've timed it myself, it takes me 3 1-2 minutes."

The Larsons, who are members of the PKM Electric Co-operative, have had rural electric power only 2 1-2 years, but they have gone all out to electrify their farm.

They are just one of the 35,000 farm families all over the Upper Midwest who are finding life on the farm more convenient, more enjoyable, actually much easier because they have dependable rural electric power available. Inside or outside, it's the handiest, most efficient hired helper you can find for the farm.

Duck Season to Open Oct. 5

45 Day Duck Season Will Open at Noon On October Fifth in Minnesota

Minnesota will have 45 days of migratory waterfowl shooting and both Dakotas seasons of 50 days, with the hunting to begin October 5, the interior department announced Thursday.

Duck bag limits in the three states will remain the same as last year—four a day and eight in possesssion in Minnesota and five per day and 10 in possession in the Dakotas.

Acting Secretary Richard D. Searles, Jr., signed new hunting regulations, liberalized because of favorable conditions on the northern breeding grounds through the summer.

Albert M. Day, director of the fish and wildlife service, said he hoped the longer seasons would "give gunners in every section of the country good opportunities for shooting regardless of unpredictable weather conditions."

While duck bag limits are unchanged, some changes for geese were made.

In the Mississippi flyway, which includes Minnesota and Wisconsin, the bag limit for geese was raised from four to five a day or in possession, thus permitting a hunter to kill or possess one additional snow goose or one additional blue goose.

The daily shooting hours for ducks, geese, brant and coot remain the same as last year—from half an hour before sunrise to an hour before sunset. On the opening day, October 5, however, shooting will begin at noon—1 p.m. in Wisconsin.

The 1951 regulations bring 10 more days of shooting to Minnesota and Wisconsin which had 35 day seasons last year. The increase to 50 days in North Dakota and South Dakota brings hunters five days more shooting than allowed last year.

Following are details on open seasons and limits:

Mississippi flyway (Minnesota Oct. 5-Nov. 18; Wisconsin, Oct. 18-Nov. 25) ducks, daily bag limit four, possession limit eight; may include one wood duck only.. Daily bag for American and red-breasted mergansers 25 singly or in the aggregate of both kinds; no possession limit after opening day of the season. Geese, daily bag and possession limits, five, including not more than (a) two Canada geese or its subspecies, or (b) two white-fronted geese or (c) one Canada goose or its subspecies and one white-fronted goose. Coot, daily bag and possession limits; 10.

Woodcock—daily bag limit four, possession limit eight. Minnesota Oct. 1-Oct. 30; Wisconsin, Oct. 1-Oct. 31.

Production Announced

Chairman Strandquist Announces Acreage Goals For Marshall County

County 1952 production for rye, wheat and barley were announced today for Marshall county by A. A. Strandquist, chairman of the County Agricultural Mobilization Committee.

According to Mr. Strandquist, the county's acreage goal for those crops are as follows: Wheat 127,700 acres; barley 99,900 acres; and rye for harvest 1,500 acres.

In making this announcement, Mr. Strandquist explained that these acreages are considered to be Marshall county's share of the state goals for each of these crops. The state goal for wheat is 1,100,000 acres; barley 1,400,000 acres; and rye for harvest 190,000 acres.

The national goal for wheat of 78,850,000 acres; for barley of 12,865,000 acres; and for rye the 1951 harvested acreage of 1,020,000 acres are in line with good land used and for all possible expansion of food crops including hay and pasture.

The national barley goal, in line with the effort to increase the production of food for livestock, is about 15 percent higher than last year's planted acreage.

Marshall county goals for these crops which are considered on a national basis as fall-seeded crops are almost identical with the 1951 plantings. No individual farm goals will be established.

John C. Cornelius, state volunteer chairman, said that national and state quotas will not be set for the drive but that, at the request of volunteers, each county will have its own definite sales objective. Bond sales for 1951 are well behind last year but during July "E" bond sales increased sharply. Although county quotas are ambitious, Cornelius said volunteers feel that they will be successful.

D. H. Austinson, Warren, Marshall county chairman, has been notified that Marshall county will have a quota of $67,000 in E. F, and G. bonds for the eight-week period of the drive.

With the slogan "Defense is Our Job, Too" the drive will seek to enroll more wage and salary earners on the Payroll Savings Plan, and will encourage farmers, professional groups, the self-employed and all other citizens to maintain continuous, planned savings.

OUTLAW GUNS

BY E. E. HALLERAN

THE STORY SO FAR: Helen Bartell, Dan Frazer, the enigmatic Gonzales and old Wenslow are in the Bartell ranch house outside Mesa Verde. They have just beaten off an attack by men trying to determine the location of the munitions cache. Only Frazer knows where it is. Gonzales is aware that the message revealing the location had been hidden in a bullet from Archie Scott's gun. He does not know that Frazer already has recovered the message, however. Helen tells Gonzales that she removed the original bullets and dumped them in the garbage when she reloaded the gun. Thoroughly deceived, Gonzales rides away to Mesa Verde.

CHAPTER XVII

They left the ranch house in silence, the girl anxious and Frazer grim while Wenslow seemed to be occupied by his thoughts. The past twenty-four hours had put the old man into a dangerous mess which he still did not fully understand, and he seemed to be using the time to figure things out.

They left the trail after a few minutes and swung wide to the southwest through a rocky little canyon that was almost entirely hidden from the valley. It brought them out in lower country and they crossed a wide mesquite flat where the timber gave way to all the barbarous vegetation of the southwestern badlands. It was hard riding, but no one complained. Frazer saw that Helen Bartell was taking a pretty bad scratching from the cactus which grew so thickly in the region, but she did not complain and he was too much engrossed in his own pains to worry very much about it.

The rest of the day was just a bad dream to Dan. He remembered the effort of getting back into the saddle and he had some hazy memories of holding himself erect while Wenslow led the way down a slope into a rocky valley. After that he had only flashes of real consciousness. Several times he had a peculiar idea that he was riding stirrup to stirrup with Helen Bartell, the girl's hand helping to support him in the saddle. Those were the pleasant moments of his nightmare, the rest of it was just a matter of grinding pain.

Party Finally Reaches The Little Bear Mine

Then he awoke to find himself in some kind of a room. It was completely dark, but a dim glow nearby indicated the presence of a stove. He was under a roof, in a building, but he could not understand why no one was near him. Where had he been left and why didn't somebody strike a light?

He felt the girl's hand on his shoulder, its pressure insistent but comforting. In spite of his sense of danger he liked the touch, so he remained silent, trying to force his mind into some semblance of clear thought. She seemed to realize his perplexity, for she leaned toward him, her lips close to his ears as she explained, "We're in the old storehouse of the Little Bear mine. There were four riders in the gulch just at dusk. Mexicans, I think. We don't know whether they went away or not. Wenslow and Rafferty are out scouting now."

"Who's Rafferty?" he asked, matching her whisper.

"Caretaker. He doesn't know why we're here, but he hasn't had time to ask questions. He just recognized me and let us come in. The Mexicans appeared immediately afterwards. Now stop talking. We don't want to give ourselves away."

Wenslow came in then, his first words a warning. "Dont strike a light. Rafferty's still out there, tryin' to figure out where the polecats went to. Last we seen of 'em they was ridin' off toward the south. We don't figure they seen anything of us here, but we can't be sure."

"Is he going to stand guard out there?" Helen asked.

"Fer a spell. Then I'll relieve him. We don't want to take no chances in bein' surprised durin' the night."

"I'm getting awful curious," Frazer remarked significantly. "What happened that I don't know about?"

Wenslow chuckled dryly. "I reckon the first thing is about five miles o' ridin'. You passed out when we still had that fur to go. Somehow the lady kept ye from fallin' outa the saddle and about dusk we found the mine. The guard let us come in—mostly because she insisted—and then the Mexes showed up. We been watchin' them ever since."

"Did you learn anything?"

"A little. They're curious about this mine."

"But they didn't try to come close?"

"Nope. That's what seems to make 'em so dangerous in my way o' thinkin'. They musta seen somethin' to make 'em stay away."

"What did they finally do?"

"Sneaked off down a gulch toward the border. Rafferty tryin' to see whether they left a spy on the job or whether all of 'em slipped off."

"I guess we're in for it," Frazer said quietly. "It sounds like a Candino scouting party to me. They've looked the place over. Now they've gone back for help before they try to rush us."

"Is there anything we can do about it?"

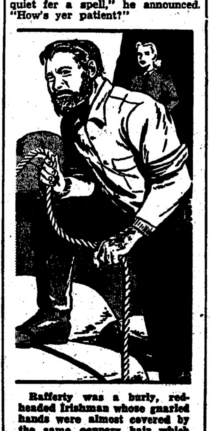
"Only what we planned to do when we arrived. Find some way of blocking their game. If the bandit crowd ever gets its dirty paws on those munitions they'll make a shambles of the whole border country. The munitions are here, aren't they?"

"Down the old mine shaft," Wenslow cut in. "Rafferty talked about it. He thought we knew."

The girl spoke swiftly. "Then I think we should try to find some way of blowing up the tunnel. There must be powder of some sort that could be used for the purpose. Then there would be no reason for an attack to be made. No one could get anything."

"I don't like to do that," Frazer demurred. "For two reasons. We might need the supplies for someone on our side if this thing spreads—and I'm still thinking of my own position. I'll have to justify all the alarm I've caused back at headquarters, and those guns will be valuable evidence to me."

A new voice hailed from just beyond the doorway and the conference broke up. A man came in, the reek of a particularly odorous pipe accompanying him. "Looks like all quiet fer a spell," he announced. "How's yer patient?"



Rafferty was a burly, redheaded Irishman whose gnarled hands were almost covered by the same coppery hair which thatched his head.

"Awake," Frazer told him briefly. "What happened to the bandits?"

"All gone but two," the man replied. "A pair of 'em camped just beyond the first bend o' the gulch. Looks like they figure somebody's comin' back, but by the way they're sprawled out they ain't plannin' on no company fer quite a spell."

"Nobody else in the vicinity?"

"Nope. Looks like it might be a quiet night. Got any idea what's up?"

Frazer told him, explaining in as much detail as he considered necessary. When he finished the story Rafferty grunted unhappily. "Then ye figure we're due to have a passel o' renegades jump us before long?"

Defense of Mine Planned by Group

"It looks that way. Did you have any plans for getting word to your people in the event of trouble?"

"Nope. Nobody looked for trouble."

"Well, it's coming—and you might as well know what you can expect. I've sent out a report and a request for troops. I think I'll get quick action on the request. We've got to hold until those troops arrive."

"How long?"

"Let's see. This is Wednesday, isn't it? The message went out early this morning. It should reach the proper hands tonight. If we get the best action for which we can hope there should be troop orders issued during the night. The soldiers can't reach Caliente Junction before noon, even if they get a double-quick order. That would bring them to Mesa Verde late to-morrow. Figure it out from there."

"Then we can expect no help before Friday noon," Helen said, her voice calm but grim.

Their campaign was pretty well outlined by the time dawn invaded the gulch. Still Frazer was glad for the daylight. He wanted to see the lay of the land, particularly the relative positions of the storehouse and the mine shaft which held the hidden munitions. In spite of Helen's protests he walked out into the gray light of early morning, handling himself gingerly, but content that he was feeling none of the lightheadedness which might have resulted from the ride. His wounded ribs ached painfully, but he knew that he would be able to handle himself reasonably well in the sort of battle which promised to develop.

The entrance to the abandoned shaft was only about a hundred feet from the rickety shack in which they had spent the night, and a single glance indicated that neither place was going to be a good spot to set up a defense. The storehouse was too flimsy, offering no protection against flying bullets, while the shaft entrance was strategically bad. It would be exposed to a raking fire from two sides as well as any frontal attack which might come. Either the house or the shaft would be a death trap to a defending force.

He studied the gulch carefully, his attention attracted by a formation of solid rock which flanked the mine shaft on the far side. "I think there's where we'll have to locate," he said abruptly. "We can't defend ourselves or the mine from down here, but we can make a mighty stout stand from behind those boulders on the cliff top. They can't rush us in numbers while we're up there. It's too hard to reach."

She studied the rise of the rock wall carefully and nodded agreement. "I suppose you're right. Anyway, it seems like the best place to set up a defense. We'll be almost above the mouth of the shaft, in a position to cover the opening without the danger of being trapped in there."

He grinned suddenly and she gave him a troubled frown. "What's the meaning of that smile?" she demanded promptly.

"I had to smile at your tone. One might think you were discussing the latest style in bonnets."

Scaling the cliff would have been no easy task for an unencumbered athlete. To get a wounded man and the necessary supplies up the rocky citadel seemed almost impossible. None of them hesitated, however. Both of the older men appreciated the wisdom of the defensive strategy and Rafferty brought out ropes which promised to make the task a little easier.

Helen Still in Shaft As Bandits Start Attack

Frazer was seeing the mine guard for the first time in daylight, and he studied the man rather closely, trying to estimate the fellow's fighting prowess as well as his trustworthiness. Rafferty was a burly, red-headed Irishman whose gnarled hands were almost covered by the same coppery hair which thatched his head and jowls. There was a determined squint to his gray eyes and an efficiency about his movements which left Frazer satisfied. The new man ought to prove a valuable ally.

He proved himself quickly, handling the problems of the cliff ascent so deftly that within the hour Frazer was resting behind a sort of rocky parapet, while Wenslow and Helen were disposing of the guns, ammunition and other supplies which Rafferty was sending up by means of the rope.

A careful survey of the narrow valley disclosed no sign of an enemy, so he turned back to select rifles from the abundant stock which had been hoisted to the ledge. Evidently Rafferty had raided the stores in the mine tunnel, for there were at least a dozen brand new Winchesters on the ledge in addition to the miscellaneous arms which had been brought from the ranch house. The defense was going to be well armed, that was sure.

He picked out four rifles, loaded them, and checked their sights for adjustment. Then he glanced around again and saw to his complete dismay that Helen Bartell was no longer on the ledge.

Peering over the edge, Frazer was just in time to see her disappearing into the mouth of the abandoned mine shaft. Rafferty was not in sight and he waited anxiously for them to reappear. There seemed to be no reason why she should have descended. Food, water and munitions were all in place. It was foolhardy to risk being trapped down there when the enemy might appear at any moment.

Then minutes went by, minutes which seemed like hours, and still there was no sound from the pair below. Frazer divided his attention between the yawning hole below him and the lower end of the gulch. Then his worst fears were realized. A pair of sombreros bobbed into view above the mesquite, followed by several others. Within the space of a minute a dozen riders were in plain sight and more were pouring out of the canyon. Even at the distance there could be no doubt as to their identity. The ragamuffin army of the bandit Candino was debouching into the little valley.

Frazer knew again the agony of fear which has gripped him when he had heard those first shots at the ranch house. The attack was coming — in force — and Helen was down there in the mine. She would have to scale the steep rocks to reach shelter.

He leaned out over the edge, shouting a hoarse warning. An answer floated back to him and he saw that both Helen and Rafferty were coming out of the shaft. They were delaying for some reason or other, but he did not have time to be curious. His job was to prepare for a delaying action which would permit them to make the climb.

HADACOL RELIEVES THAT TIRED FEELING, SAYS MR. HARRY ADKINS OF CALIFORNIA

HADACOL Helps Folks With Tired, Run-Down Conditions When Due to Deficiencies of Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron

Mr. Harry Adkins, who lives at 5242 Vesper Drive, Van Nuys, California, says he used to feel tired and run-down at the end of a day's work. Now most everybody has to work these days, but it's not necessary to feel tired and drained of energy at the end of the day. For HADACOL can help if you feel tired and run-down when due to a deficiency of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron in the system. Mr. Adkins says he started taking HADACOL and now feels much better—is no longer tired-out at the end of the day and has more energy.

Here is what Mr. Adkins says: "I had been feeling run-down and tired. About three months ago I started taking HADACOL. I had heard about it and how it had helped so many people, so I decided to try it to see if it would help me. After just a short time of taking HADACOL I could tell that I was feeling better. I no longer felt so tired after a day's work—just seemed to have more energy. I think HADACOL is a good product and I recommend it. I take it regularly each day to relieve that tired-out feeling at the end of the day, and it really does work."

HADACOL makes it possible to actually relieve the REAL CAUSE of that tired, run-down feeling when due to the lack of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Iron and Niacin in the system.

Reds Preach Hate Theme at German Youth Festival; Average Income Up

THE HATE THEME—The world press gave more space to the east German youth festival, during which Red leaders preached a theme of hate of western democracy to 2,000,000 German youths, than any other single event in recent history. The demonstration reached its climax with half a million Soviet-zone boys and girls swearing loyalty to Stalin. From the Communist viewpoint, the festival was one of the most successful propaganda stunts in Red history.

But from the viewpoint of the average boy and girl in the home towns of America, viewing the event from afar, the mass hysteria had such a flavor of Nazism it was nauseating. To the American youngster of high school and college age a football game is of more interest than staged political parades and the wild speeches of fanatics.

American youngsters, however, could not miss the hate theme preached by Red leaders. It was evident in every speech and at every moment during the rally. For the first time many American boys and girls realized there can be only one ending to this build-up—the eventual clash of the free world and Communism.

There was one bright spot in the whole affair. A few of the thousands of Communist youths slipped into the western zone of Berlin for a first-hand look at the "horrible conditions" preached by their leaders. What they found was surprising and revealing. These few learned the truth and may carry it behind the iron curtain to their families and friends.

YOUR INCOME—According to the department of commerce the average income for each man, woman, and child in the United States last year was $1,436, a gain of $116, or 9 per cent over 1949.

The average home-towner, however, had no reason to feel happy about the report. The cost of living increased 6.5 per cent during the same period and the rise in the tax burden cut down the net gain.

The total income to individuals over the nation was a record $217,000,000,000, a gain of 11 per cent over 1949. The department said average incomes ranged from $698 in Mississippi to $1,909 in Delaware and $1,986 in the District of Columbia.

DISAGREEMENT—The senate armed services and foreign relations committees last week issued a statement saying that the group would make no report on the eight-week MacArthur hearing. The committee said that formal evidence of disagreement in the senate on far east policy might have bad effect on the Korean-truce negotiations and signing of the peace treaty with Japan next month.

That statement had hardly been made public knowledge when eight senators, members of those committees, issued their own conclusions drawn from the long hearings, calling the Truman administration's far east policy a catastrophic failure. They declared that it "represents the most desolate failure in the history of our foreign policy."

These eight senators have made it clear that there is disagreement in the senate. It would seem, therefore, the conclusions of the full committee can no longer be withheld for reasons given and should be made public immediately. There is little likelihood that it will be, however.

Contrary to what these eight senators may say, there is a feeling in Washington these men put their political ambitions above the welfare of their country as expressed by the full committee's vote to withhold its report for the present.

RUSSIAN PROTEST—There is new evidence that trade reprisals against the iron curtain countries for their anti-American actions are beginning to hurt. The latest evidence comes from no less an authority than the Kremlin itself.

In a note delivered to the state department, the Soviet bluntly accused the U. S. of aggravating serious tension between the two countries by canceling the 1937 American-Soviet trade pact.

Congress ordered the canceling of trade concessions to iron curtain countries early in the year. While the cancellation will not bar Soviet goods from this country, it will increase tariffs on them and make it harder for them to compete in the U. S. market.

The Russians would like to continue their campaign of distortion and abuse against the United States, but at the same time enjoy trade concessions offered friendly nations. The Soviet Union is finding, however, it can't have its cake and eat it too.

ARMY NEEDS—The nation's needs in manpower for this fiscal year—June 30 to June 30—was made known last week. It gives the young men in the nation an idea of what the future holds in store for them.

Selective service announced it expected to draft 300,000 men during the year—an average of 25,000 a month. There have also been reports the army may need 430,000 alone to fill gaps caused by discharges.

Some 550,000 men were called up by draft boards between last September and June 30. The defense department already has asked for 35,000 men in August, 34,000 in September and 41,000 in October.

WEST POINT—The first of the 90 cadets involved in West Point's cribbing scandal left the academy last week. Others will be sent home this week and in the near future.

Five days after receiving their orders the men must report to their draft boards. They must either register for the draft or if already registered, advise their boards of a change of status.

Meanwhile, President Truman has ordered a full investigation of the athletic systems at both West Point and Annapolis to determine if the service academies are overemphasizing football and other sports.

TRUCE TALKS—Conflicting reports continue concerning the possibilities of success in the Korean truce talks. One day there are reports that progress is being made, the next that the talks are near collapse.

At the moment there seems to be little reason to expect a settlement. Red China is reported to have said: "If the American side stubbornly adheres to its unreasonable demand for plunder and rejects the just and reasonable proposal of our side, an agreement will be impossible."

In other words, the Communists are unwilling to compromise on an armistice line. The Allies have indicated they will compromise, but will not accept the 38th parallel.

FLOOD RELIEF

Kansas-Missouri Relief Funds Asked

President Truman has asked Congress to appropriate $400,000,000 for rehabilitation and relief of sufferers from recent floods in Kansas, Missouri and nearby areas. The President told Congress the area is of such importance to the nation that its speedy recovery is vital.

Under the President's plan some of the funds would be used to pay rehabilitation grants to victims of the floods. A part of it would be used for loans, but many in the area lost everything and now have nothing to put up as security. These persons would have to be aided with outright grants.

To speed action on the measure, Vice-President Barkley referred it to the senate public works and appropriations committees.

SUMMER-SEEDED legumes and grasses often make better stands than earlier seedings with nurse or companion crops, reports the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee.

Many Midwestern farmers say that competition from the nurse crop weakens the seedlings, making them vulnerable to midsummer drouth.

Alfalfa, clovers and all types of legume-grass mixtures are well suited to summer seeding.

One of the big advantages is that weed competition is eliminated during the hot summer months when the soil is comparatively dry. Weed seed requires more moisture for germination than does legume and grass seed.

Agronomists recommend late July through mid-August as a good time to seed the legumes. A firm seed bed helps guard against planting the seed too deep.

Getting the seed in the ground isn't the whole story, though. You have to feed the soil so it can feed the crop. At planting time, summer-seeded legume grass mixtures need a complete fertilizer carrying nitrogen, phosphate and potash, plus calcium and magnesium. Then the plants will develop a strong crop-feeding root system and you will get thicker, leafier top growth. The legumes need lots of phosphate and potash. You can provide this after they are established by top-dressing with commercial fertilizer carrying these nutrients.

THE STORY SO FAR: Frazer, Helen Bartell and Wenslow, having deceived Gonzales, a Mexican agent, as to the location of the munitions cache, make the painful trek to The Little Bear copper mine where the guns and ammunition are hidden. There they meet the caretaker, Rafferty. They are discovered by scouts from Candino's bandit army and know that it is just a matter of time until Candino's entire force descends upon them in an effort to get the guns and powder stored in the mine. They complete hasty preparations for a defense just as the bandits arrive for the attack. The outlaw band greatly outnumbers the defenders of the mine.

CHAPTER XVIII

He lined his sights deliberately on the foremost rider and squeezed the trigger. The man went down in a rolling tangle of arms and legs, but Frazer knew only a momentary thrill of savage satisfaction. There was no time for gloating now; the battle was reaching a desperation stage. He jacked in another shell and drew fire once more, this time all too aware that his targets were getting uncomfortably large. The realization made the next clean hit a matter of no pleasure whatsoever.

He fired twice more, getting a bandit with each bullet, but as he levered a fifth shell he caught a glimpse of Rafferty coming over the ragged parapet. The dirty . . . ! Leaving Helen to come up last!

For a split second he was tempted to desert his post and rush for the rope, but reason caught up with him in time. He forced himself to sight carefully in spite of the anger that had welled up within him. Another shot and another fallen outlaw. Then he grabbed for a fresh rifle. There was no keeping account of shots at a time like this. Better to make sure something would happen with every pull of the trigger.

The movement gave him a chance to see what was happening beside him. Rafferty and Wenslow were hauling the rope up. So that was it! The mine guard had been playing it the smart way. He had come up first so he could help haul the girl bodily out of danger.

Emil Kranz Appears Among the Attackers

The rifle fire was a steady crackle now, but the charge had spent itself. The raiders had dashed in, taking their losses, only to find themselves balked of their prey and subjected to a withering fire from the guns on the ledge. Meanwhile the dismounted riflemen were too far away to be effective and the mounted bandits were still falling.

The wavering became a halt and the halt became a wild retreat, but still Frazer did not cease firing. It was no time to give an enemy a break. With a bandit army out there in the gorge the only thing to do was to cut the odds while the opportunity presented itself. Every dead outlaw was one less threat for the future.

"I reckon we'll have a minute to rest," Rafferty grunted with a satisfied grin. "Mister Bandit Candino just got hisself a danged good lesson. Them buckos are kinda like Sioux; they're tough fighters when they kin git the other feller on the run, but they don't know what to do when the other party turns out to be a standpater."

"How many in that mob, Wenslow?" Frazer asked. "What's your guess? A hundred?"

"Somewhere in that neighborhood," the little man replied. "We shore picked off a lot of 'em, but there's still too dam' many to suit me."

Ten minutes passed in uncomfortable silence and then Wenslow reported, "Four men ridin' toward us. Look like one of 'em is wavin' his shirt-tail."

Frazer twisted himself uncomfortably around to look. Four riders were coming up the gulch, one of them bearing a dirty rag fastened to a gun barrel. "Flag of truce," he muttered, half to himself. "This makes us a real army, I suppose."

"They want to remove the wounded, I think," Helen said with determined calm.

"Looks like it." Frazer's reply was mechanical, his mind more on what he saw than what the girl was saying. Back of the advancing riders he was able to study the main-body of outlaws for the first time. Even at the distance he could tell that many of them were almost unarmed. Those few riflemen who had attempted to cover the first attack seemed to be almost the only bandits with efficient firearms. Many had only pistols—if they had even those—and the remainder carried what looked like many varieties of old muskets.

"Shove out the extra rifles so it'll look like a lot of us up here," he ordered. "When they start to talk move around a bit. If this is going to be a bluffing contest we'll try to hold up our end of the game."

"What makes you think they're bluffin'?" Wenslow asked.

"Look 'em over. They need guns. They've decided that they can't just gallop in and take what they need, so they'll try something else. I don't think they've got enough well armed men to venture a full scale attack."

The flag bearer pulled aside and one of the other men stepped forward. He was a big man, and Frazer knew him in spite of the huge sombrero which almost hid his face. Emil Kranz, soldier of fortune, had appeared in his proper niche at last.

The big German did not try to disguise his voice. "Hello," he yelled boldly. "Who is in charge here?"

Rafferty stood up, his rifle held ready. "What d'ye want now?" he bellowed. "Come a step nearer and I'm goin' to forget about that dirty scrub rag ye've got."

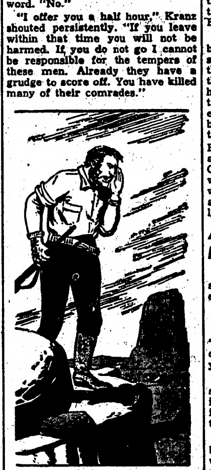
"Don't be foolish, my friend. I offer you good terms. Leave this valley, and we permit you to go in safety."

"No dice."

"Think again. We far outnumber you. You cannot hope to win."

Rafferty's reply was a single word. "No."

"I offer you a half hour," Kranz shouted persistently. "If you leave within that time you will not be harmed. If you do not go I cannot be responsible for the tempers of these men. Already they have a grudge to score off. You have killed many of their comrades."



"Git outa this valley in ten minutes, and we won't shoot no more o' yer dear comrades."

"We'll make you an offer," Rafferty shouted back. "Git outa this valley in ten minutes, and we won't shoot no more o' yer dear comrades."

"You are foolish. You can't . . ."

"I'm countin' time already. Pick up yer wounded and git!"

This time the German seemed to recognize the finality in the order. He turned to say something to his companions and Rafferty bawled a last order. "Don't try to pick up no guns, neither. The first hombre what forgets his business gits shot. Hustle it up!"

Bandits Carry On The Wearying Battle

The quartette on the ledge watched over gunsights as the four riders separated, Frazer concentrating his attention on Kranz, grimly hoping that the blond man would try something out of line. He stole a quick glance at Helen and saw that she was white and tense. In the excitement of battle she had been a mighty good soldier, but now the inevitable reaction was setting in.

"Watch those riflemen," Frazer advised, more to divert her thoughts than for any other reason. "They'll make the next attempt to get us, I feel sure. See what they're up to and how many of them are preparing for action."

"Indian tactics now," Frazer guessed. "They'll try to come up the sides of the gulch and snipe at us from cover. How about their chance of getting above us, Rafferty? Can they do it?"

The mine guard shook his head. "Too steep and rocky. If they git above they'll be outa sight o' this ledge. Looks like the bad place is that shoulder o' rock over there. Somebody better keep it in sight all the time."

It was a wearying business, however, dragging on well into the late afternoon. Then the bandits seemed to get some sort of signal, for they withdrew abruptly and could be seen filtering out of the wooded areas to join the main force in the lower canyon. It was then that Helen said calmly, "I think we may be due for some help. Just after this business started I saw four riders up there to the north. They climbed out of sight on the ridge, and it seemed to me that they might be circling to get behind the bandits."

"Only four?" Frazer asked. "Not enough."

"Four could be the scouts for a large force."

"I hope so—but I don't think we can count on any help today. We've got to worry through the night on our own."

Almost as he spoke there was the spatter of fire from the lower gulch. It brought confusion to the ranks of the Candino men, although it was of short duration. Bandits charged up the slopes of the east ridge and for some minutes there was an occasional shot. Then everything was silent again.

"I don't like it," Frazer said soberly. "I'm afraid some of our friends tried to help us—and they didn't have enough of a force to do themselves or us any good."

Helen's voice was low but steady as she remarked, "I had an idea that I knew two of the riders I mentioned. They were my father and Ed Delaplane."

The early hours of darkness brought an overpowering sense of strain to the four silent people on the ledge. They were listening for those ominous sounds which might herald a final battle. At the same time there was silent wonder in each mind on the subject of that brief skirmish down the gulch. Not that any of them felt optimistic. Rather the contrary. No small scale attack would have been made on Candino's camp if any real forces were on their way. The main fight was still to be fought by three men and a girl against an overwhelmingly superior force of bandits.

Attackers Rush Again For Mine Shaft Mouth

Presently Rafferty broke the silence to ask abruptly, "Got everything ready, Miss Helen?"

"Everything ready," she replied.

"What's this?" Frazer asked.

"You two aren't planning any more crazy trips down the rope, are you?"

"Nothing like that," Helen assured him. "You lie quiet and don't irritate that wound any more than is necesary. We'll take care of this matter."

He stifled his curiosity, largely because he knew that it was unwise to talk now. Silence and alertness would have to be the watchword until after the storm broke.

After that . . .

It was nearly midnight before the weary listeners caught the first telltale sound of a careless foot. Instantly there was a rustle of movement on the ledge as the tired defenders braced themselves for battle. The night was dead calm and the moon was beginning to lighten the gloom of the gulch as it peeked into view above the hills. The bandits had timed their advance badly, perhaps in the hope that the hours would take their toll of defense alertness.

Frazer kept his attention on the ground at the base of the rock wall, and presently he saw a full dozen shadows moving toward him. Out in the gulch a scrape of a boot heel indicated that other men were advancing there. Apparently the bandits were figuring to reach close quarters and try to overwhelm the defense by sheer force of numbers. Either that or they hoped one force could neutralize the defensive fire while another party raided the arms cache.

Wenslow muttered something but Frazer did not look around, concentrating on the problem of seeing a vague shadow over the sights of a rifle. Presently he thought he had a man lined up, so he pulled the trigger. The shot set off the fireworks. From all parts of the valley guns opened up as the bandits tried to beat the defenders down under sheer weight of lead. Some of them were close enough to use revolvers now, and they had the flashes of the guns on the ledge as targets.

"Keep as low as you can," Frazer shouted above the din. "They'll fire at the gun flashes. Don't waste a bullet."

No one replied and the eerie battle went on, becoming a sort of ghostly sniping at shadows after that first intense volume of fire. Twice Frazer could see the wild rush of men for the mouth of the mine shaft, but each time the rush was beaten back by a deadly fire from the ledge. After the second attempt there was a lull and the attackers seemed to withdraw down the gulch.

"Anybody hurt?" Wenslow demanded, still assuming the role of official worrier. "I got a nick on one ear, but it ain't more'n a bee sting."

No one else reported a wound, and they settled down to wait once more. This time the wait was not so long. Within a half hour they could hear stealthy movements on the far side of the little valley, and Frazer spoke warningly. "They're sending a detachment up the gulch. That means they must plan to rush in from that side under cover of the next attack. Can you keep your eyes skinned in that direction, Helen?"

"I'll watch them," the girl answered tersely.

• Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!
Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon . . . right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.
But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, worn-out feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

SCANNING THE WEEK'S NEWS
of Main Street and the World

Threat of Inflation Increases As Price Index Hits a New High

INFLATION THREAT—With the government's report that the consumers' price index rose to a record level last month, the dangers of inflation took first place in the week's news.

The bureau of labor statistics reported the index figure went from 185.2 to 185.5. This means the retail prices of goods and services bought by moderate-income families averaged 85.5 per cent higher than the average between 1935 and 1939. This is 9 per cent above the level before the Korean war.

It also means that more than 3,000,000 workers who have cost-of-living escalator clauses in their contracts will receive automatic raises of approximately 1 cent per hour.

Industry member of the wage stabilization board, who recently approved escalator clauses in union contracts, warned when the new index figures were announced that the arrangement is not based on sound economic principles. "Putting all workers, manufacturers, farmers and merchants on escalation may easily prove the first step to national bankruptcy," the group warned.

A Beautiful Shoot

Gen. James A. Van Fleet reports UN forces will be able to withstand any new Communist attack. He said a new Red offensive would "play into our firepower. If we can get them out into the open, we would have a beautiful shoot."

The average home towner seems to have the feeling that runaway inflation is dangerously near. If each group in the nation's economy continues trying to get ahead of every other, then the economic situation may explode into a mad race that can lead to ruin.

Food and rent prices are credited with pushing the index figures to the new high. Food prices averaged 12.1 per cent higher than in June, 1950, just before the Korean war. There are indications of further increases. Large dealers are reported demanding boosts of 1 to 6 cents an item for well known brands of flour, breakfast cereals, canned fruit and vegetables, vinegar, mayonnaise and spaghetti.

The President asked repeal of: (1) The provision requiring that price ceilings reflect rises in business costs that have occurred since Korea. ("An economic booby trap," Truman called it.); (2) The amendment giving wholesalers and retailers their customary percentage markups; (3) The amendment banning the OPS livestock-slaughter quotas, under which each slaughterer was told how many animals he could handle.

No one can predict how congress will react to the President's requests, but the average small town American, whatever his political views and his beliefs concerning the cause of higher prices, wants something done about it. He realizes the nation is in as much danger today from its internal economic picture as from external enemies; he feels it is time for personal interests and politics to take a back seat to the nation's welfare.

WESTERN POLITICS—Democratic party representatives from 15 midwest states, as far east as Ohio and as far west as Wyoming, the great farm belt that came to President Truman's rescue in 1948, met at French Lick, Ind., to discuss possibilities for 1952. Their conclusions were startling to the average home towner.

Briefly, they concluded that President Truman will be a candidate for reelection and that he can defeat Sen. Robert Taft. Should Gen. Eisenhower seek the office he could have had in 1948, then Mr. Truman's chances would not be so good.

As a basis for these startling conclusions, the democratic leaders believe the President would get a large farm vote as he did in 1948 because farm prices have been high during his administration. A continued high level of domestic prosperity without inflation would also add to his chances, they concluded.

They also pointed out that Truman was denied New York's 47 electoral votes by the candidacy of Henry A. Wallace and those of four southern states by the Dixiecrats. This is unlikely in the 1952 campaign.

The big question, of course, is Gen. Eisenhower. The general is a midwesterner, and it would not be difficult to sell a national hero to the people in the home towns.

THE NEW FEAR—The latest news from Korea would indicate the Chinese Communists are beset with a new fear, that of world condemnation for breaking off the Kaesong peace talks. It is the only reasonable conclusion since the Reds announced the talks can continue if the Allies will admit a plane tried to murder the Communist delegates by dropping explosive bombs and jellied gasoline near their quarters.

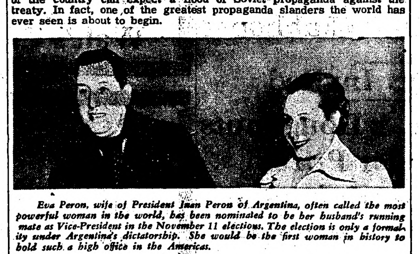
Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, who previously rejected their charge as a fake and a fraud, is unlikely to accede to their demand. Ridgway has informed the Reds that their neutrality-violation charges are nothing more than malicious lies, deliberately manufactured for propaganda effect and unworthy of reply.

As long as both parties maintain this attitude there is little hope for a resumption of talks. And even if they should be resumed, other incidents will be manufactured by the Reds to further their propaganda aims. Peace in Korea will not be restored until one side or the other is thoroughly and completely defeated.

JAPANESE TREATY—On Tuesday 34 nations gathered at San Francisco to sign the proposed peace treaty with Japan. Russia is represented, but no one expects her to sign the document which is sponsored by the United States. To the contrary, she will do everything in her power to wreck the treaty negotiations and eventually will present her own versions of a pact.

The big news as the conference opened was India's boycott of the meeting. That country's denunciation of the treaty was in direct line with Moscow propaganda and will have many repercussions in this nation's foreign aid program. It may lead to a tougher U.S. policy toward India and a reduction in aid given her in recent months. It may also mean that a number of other countries will suffer as a direct result of India's stand.

From now until the conference closes, the people in the home towns of the country can expect a flood of Soviet propaganda against the treaty. In fact, one of the greatest propaganda slanders the world has ever seen is about to begin.



Eva Peron, wife of President Juan Peron of Argentina, often called the most powerful woman in the world, has been nominated to be her husband's running mate as Vice-President in the November 11 elections. The election is only a formality under Argentina's dictatorship. She would be the first woman in history to hold such a high office in the Americas.

Peiping Demands Life Data on Everyone

The Communists in China have demanded a combination confession and autobiography for millions of persons in the country whom the Reds find necessary to re-educate in the new attitudes of Chinese communism. It is a complete record and repudiation of the past life of the individuals concerned.

The document serves as a domestic passport that must be produced whenever the possessor seeks a new job, wants to move from one part of the country to another, or from some other reason, comes under official scrutiny.

The person under examination may have made money on the stock market or gone to a U.S. university. Whatever it is, these must be confessed and branded as bad and wrong.

Predicts Intensity Polio Cases for 1951

ANN ARBOR — Approximately 27,000 cases of polio will occur in the United States during 1951, a University of Michigan school of public health statistician has predicted.

"There are a number of reasons for supposing that 1951 will be a far less severe year for polio than the record year of 1949 during which about 43,000 cases were reported," Dr. Fay M. Hemphill indicated.

Dr. Hemphill's "guesstimate" is based on figures supplied to him through the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, Inc., by the United States public health service which receives weekly reports from the various state health departments throughout the nation.

Since June, 1950, he has been making a continuous statistical study of the areas and number of polio cases occurring in the United States. His studies are sponsored by grants from the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, Inc.

MRS. CAMERON FINDS RELIEF FROM HER STOMACH DISTRESS
HADACOL Helps Folks Who Suffer Stomach Distress and Sleeplessness Caused by an Upset Stomach, If Due to a Deficiency of Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron
Life is wonderful when you feel well. And in order to feel well, folks just must get a good night's sleep, but that is sometimes pretty difficult when you suffer from stomach distress. Mrs. Evelyn Cameron of 1844 48th Avenue, San Francisco, California, says this used to be her problem. She suffered with stomach distress and bloating which prevented her from getting a full night's sleep. Then she heard how folks who suffered from these ailments when due to deficiencies of Vitamins B₁, B₂, Niacin and Iron were being helped by today's great HADACOL. Mrs. Cameron started taking HADACOL and soon felt so much better. Now she says that she thinks HADACOL is marvelous and is more than happy to recommend it.
Here is what she says: "I used to have such stomach distress—would have so much bloating after meals. This was not only very uncomfortable but prevented me from sleeping. I would go to bed and then not be able to sleep. I started taking HADACOL—I had heard so much about it. Well, after just a couple of weeks I felt so much better. I was no longer bothered with my stomach, and I could sleep so wonderfully well. I go to bed now and get a full night's sleep. I wake up in the morning feeling so fresh and rested. HADACOL is certainly marvelous and I am more than happy to recommend it."
Yes, HADACOL makes it possible to actually relieve the REAL CAUSE of stomach distress and sleeplessness due to an upset stomach when due to deficiencies of Vitamins B₁, B₂, Niacin and Iron in the system.
AND EVEN MORE IMPORTANT! Continued use of this great HADACOL not only gives continuous complete relief but helps prevent these ailments from returning when due to such deficiencies. Now, that's the kind of product you have been waiting for. That's the kind you should buy and start taking at once. And HADACOL is so easy to take—comes in pleasant liquid form and is so easily and quickly absorbed and assimilated in the blood, ready to go to work for you immediately.
HADACOL Is So Effective
Because HADACOL helps build up the hemoglobin content of your blood (when Iron is needed) to carry these precious Vitamins and Minerals to every organ and to every part of your body.
You may have tried other Vitamin preparations or other Vitamin and Mineral preparations, so we make you this offer. Try a bottle of HADACOL today if you need Vitamins B₁, B₂, Niacin and Iron. You be the judge. If you do not believe that HADACOL is the best Vitamin and Mineral preparation you have ever taken, we will gladly send you back your money. That's our positive money-back guarantee. You take no chances.
So be fair to yourself. Don't put off finding relief another day. If you are suffering from these deficiency-caused ailments, you owe it to yourself to start taking HADACOL today.
Refuse Substitutes
And remember! There's only one HADACOL. Don't let anyone tell you something else is "just as good." Insist on genuine HADACOL. You risk nothing because HADACOL is sold on a strict money-back guarantee.
Sold at all drug counters. Trial size, $1.25, but buy the large family-size, only $3.50. If your dealer does not sell HADACOL, order direct from The LeBlanc Corporation, Lafayette, Louisiana.

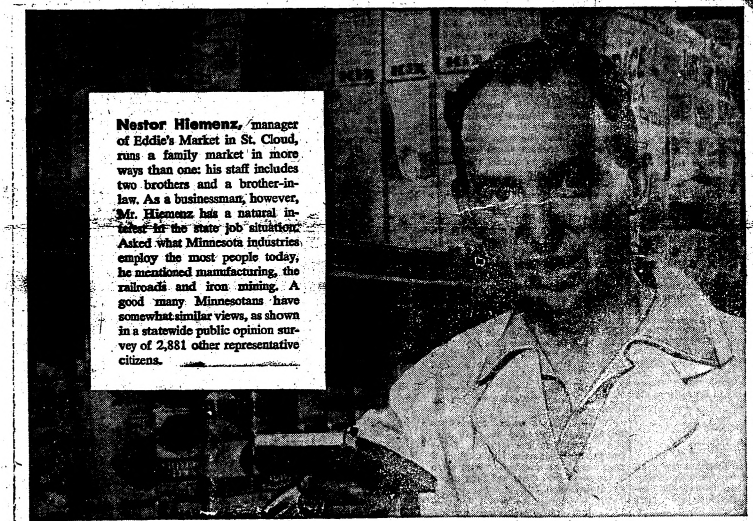
Early Railroad

The Erie railroad, completed from the Hudson river to Lake Erie in 1851, was the first road to reach "western waters."

Phosphorus Needed

Phosphorus is important for building bones, teeth and other tissues, and many important functional substances such as the phospholipids.



Nestor Hiemenz, manager of Eddie's Market in St. Cloud, runs a family market in more ways than one: his staff includes two brothers and a brother-in-law. As a businessman, however, Mr. Hiemenz has a natural interest in the state job situation. Asked what Minnesota industries employ the most people today, he mentioned manufacturing, the railroads and iron mining. A good many Minnesotans have somewhat similar views, as shown in a statewide public opinion survey of 2,881 other representative citizens.

"What Minnesota industries employ the most people today?"

SURVEY FINDINGS:

24% of Minnesotans say MANUFACTURING... 21% say IRON MINING... others say FARMING.

The industries mentioned by Minnesota people in the survey are indeed big employers. So are certain other Minnesota industries like trade, transportation, construction, service and utilities. Which ranks first or second matters little—what really counts is how much all of them mean to all the state.

Each miner has 7 "dependents"

For example, these industries, beyond their own large payrolls, help create many other jobs as well. Take iron mining. It not only meets a $50-million annual payroll . . . it also accounts for far more jobs in the Minnesota stores, factories and local governments that provide the products and services range workers buy.

The figures are eye-openers. For every 1,000 people employed in the mines, 2,000 more are engaged in filling their needs. These 3,000 people have 4,000 family members and dependents. The net of it: every 1,000 miners really account for the life support of some 7,000 Minnesotans.

Million-dollar customers

Yet there's even more to this employment picture. Aside from miners' needs, the mining companies are $100-million-a-year customers for machinery, supplies and many other products and services of industry. Here, too, are other range-created jobs—possibly in your own company, almost certainly in your community.

It's good to know these economic facts of life. If Minnesotans understand their iron mining industry, they can help it create still more jobs and benefits for themselves—through fair treatment.

More ore jobs for Minnesota?

It is possible, you see, that the best days in Minnesota iron mining lie not behind but ahead. If, by balanced operations, the producers can turn out high-grade, low-grade and taconite ores cheaply enough to compete with ores from other places, the State may see greater iron ore activity than ever. It would be more than mining—it would be, increasingly, manufacturing—requiring more manpower per ton of ore produced. It would last for generations.

Would Minnesota people like to see great new "ore factories" and good new ore jobs sprout up all across the Range? Then for their own sake they should favor treating this industry the same fair way they treat other industries that help the state prosper.

THE IRON MINING INDUSTRY OF MINNESOTA

A FAIR DEAL FOR MINNESOTA'S IRON ORE MEANS A GOOD DEAL FOR YOU

Easy Makes His "Cat" Tread Lightly

Driving home on Three Ponds Road yesterday, I was flagged down by Easy Roberts' boy Skeeter. "Take it slow," he advised. "Dad's crossing this road with our tractor, just beyond the bend."

Around the curve I saw why Skeeter stopped me. Easy had laid two rows of old truck tires across the road, and was driving his new "Cat" tractor over them!

"More trouble this way," Easy explains, "but it does keep those tank tracks from tearing up the asphalt when I have to cross over to our other fields. After all, the roads belong to all of us—and I guess I'd get mad if someone else chewed them up."

From where I sit, Easy is my kind of citizen. He doesn't just give democracy lip service. He honestly believes it's his duty to consider the other fellow's interests. Whether it's the right to use the public highways or the right to enjoy an occasional glass of beer, Easy's out to protect his neighbor's "right of way."

BY E. E. HALLERAN

THE STORY SO FAR: Attempting to find meaning in Archie Scott's cryptic message, "The Little Bear," which is supposed to indicate the location of a vital store of illegal arms and ammunition, Dan Frazer goes to talk with Marshal Emery. He asks Emery about the physical layout of the country surrounding the copper mining town of Mesa Verde. Emery describes trails and casually happens to mention The Little Bear mine. Frazer knows then that this, at last, is the hiding place of the munitions. Delaplane enters to announce that Kranz and his band have left town. Frazer sets out in the direction of the Bartells' house in the country where Helen had gone.

CHAPTER XV

"Nobody."

"See?" the prospector grunted. "He's lyin'. I know I seen a couple more riders down there." Again he raised his dry old voice to warn the restless intruder. "Jest keep on ye way, brother. This is one time ye ain't sneakin' in to shoot nobody. Take your pard and git goin.' My finger's awful itchy."

At his side Helen Bartell took a quick breath. "I believe you're right," she whispered excitedly. "That's the man who killed the stagecoach passenger."

"Not me," Wenslow disclaimed, sighting steadily over the Winchester's sights. "I ain't the one what's right; it's that big galoot who was up to your place this mornin.' He's the one said to watch out for these hombres."

A rifle cracked from the distant trees, its slug imbedding itself in the timbers of the house just an instant before the pair on the porch could hear the report. Wenslow replied with a quick shot directed at the spot where the two riders had disappeared into the brush, then he broke for the door, pullin the girl along with him.

Helen and Wenslow Begin Their Defense

Still there did not seem to be any sign of an enemy on the slope. The rattle of shots still sounded from the south side and once there was a quick clamor of voices. Someone had yelled in pain or alarm and the deep-voiced man had shouted an order. After that the shooting picked up in tempo, but still nothing developed on the north side.

Then Helen Bartell came in, visibly excited. "There's somebody else down there," she blurted. "They're still shooting—but no bullets are striking the house. Either they're fighting among themselves or they've been attacked by a third party."

When Dan Frazer left his horse and plunged toward the sound of the firing he was fully aware of the risks he ran. Those gunmen ahead of him were working on the supposition that Helen Bartell had in her possession a gun containing a dummy shell. It would make no difference to them whether they took the gun from a living person or a dead one. There would be no parleys or surrenders in this war. It was going to be a case of kill or be killed.

A man yelled an order then, and Frazer knew that this was quite a gathering of thugs ahead of him. That voice was the same voice he had heard when the stage was held up. The leader here was the man who had directed that first murder from his point of vantage on the rocks.

He could not hear the words, but it seemed clear that the man was issuing orders for the next stage of the siege. Accordingly Frazer moved forward a little more rapidly, trying to close in while the outlaws were interested in what their leader was telling them. The haste nearly proved fatal. He ducked through a cover of overhanging pine and almost ran into a man who was running toward him.

There was a split second of amazed recognition, and then the other man threw up his gun which he had been carrying in his one good hand. Frazer's weapon was just as prompt, but he retained his coolness long enough to make sure of his shot. The man ahead of him was the fellow he had wounded last night, the murderer of Archie Scott. That was enough to make him grim and deadly. He heard the outlaw's gun explode, but he never knew whether the bullet went close to him or not. He was intent only on squeezing the trigger of his Colt while its sights were lined steadily on the killer's chest.

Then the man was down and Frazer was leaping for cover, aware of the uproar which the two shots had caused. For the split second of the actual shooting he had moved in something like a dream, but the savage anger passed and he became the cautious stalker once more. Squaring accounts with one dirty murderer was not going to end this deal. There were four more of them just ahead, and their yells indicated that they knew something had happened to their companion.

Again he shifted position, waiting for some sound that would locate the enemy, but the only telltale noise was a crashing of brush farther up the hillside. Instantly he knew that he was going to be up against some smart strategy. His adversaries were already trying to surround him.

Dan turned to slip back toward the spot where he had left his bronco, but a pair of quick shots forced him to stand and give battle. So that was the plan! Two of the outlaws were stalking him closely, ready to fire at any indication of movement, while the other two circled to cut him off.

It didn't leave him very much choice, so he took the gamble which seemed to offer the best chance of success. It was time to attack while the enemy was divided. He slid forward again, picking his cover as he moved toward the ranch house. Almost immediately a bullet barked a tree just above his head and he took a fast shot at something which moved among the pines. This time his shot brought a cry of pain and he went in more savagely, aware that his only chance was to dispose of the pair before the flankers could close in on him.

He raced toward the sound of the guns, almost immediately sighting the diminutive form of Jack Snagg.

A bullet ripped a furrow in the slack of his shirt, but running footsteps told him that the gunman had retreated. It was the heavy voice against that yelled, "Back this way, Snagg! Here he is!"

Even as he recognized the plan that his unconscious mind was formulating he saw that it wasn't going to work. He had maneuvered back to the edge of the clearing and there was just a glimpse of a big man diving into cover among the trees. A quick shot from the outlaw told Frazer what he had to face now. That hidden renegade could cover the open ground and hold him here until the flankers came up. Dan was in a pretty nasty sort of trap.

Frazer Is Wounded In Duel With Snagg

There was a shout from the man ahead and then Frazer was charging toward him at a dead run. Instantly the forest clattered under the din of gunfire, guns, hammering from several directions. He knew that a slug grazed his thigh, but he did not falter. There was no time to look around; his sole objective at the moment was the burly outlaw behind the tree just in front of him.

Dan's wild charge seemed to disconcert the man, who sprang to his feet. Instantly Frazer slid to a halt, lining his sights careful in the moment of stopping. Again he steeled himself to shoot deliberately, making his aim perfect instead of wasting the lead through haste. As with Scott's killer, the grim strategy paid off. He saw his man go sprawling to the ground, but even as he swung to face his other enemies he knew they were having troubles of their own. That firing from the rear had not been directed at him. Not since the first shot while he was on the ground had he been conscious of a bullet coming near him. Someone had entered the fight and was taking the attention of the surviving outlaws.

He raced back toward the sound of the guns, almost immediately sighting the diminutive form of Jack Snagg behind an outcropping of rock. The little gunman recognized Frazer at the same moment and there was another one of those split second duels. For the third time Frazer gambled on giving the enemy the first shot, sighting grimly instead of letting the urgency of the moment drive him into unwise haste. This time he paid a heavier cost. Snagg's bullet seared along his ribs, bringing pain that was almost unbearable.

He fought off the shock of it and held steadily on his target as he pulled the trigger. There was a moment in which he could not be sure just what was happening in front of him. His eyes did not seem to focus properly any more and he fired again, blindly this time even though something in his mind told him that Snagg was down. After that he lost control of the few clear ideas which had remained to him, and he realized that he was sinking to his knees.

When Dan's head cleared he was down on all fours, his gun still clenched in his fist. Numbing pain still clawed at his left side, but he knew what he was doing. He had to get up and reload. Somewhere here in this woodland was another enemy.

A twig snapped on the upper hillside and as he shifted painfully to face the threat he heard a thin voice that sounded vaguely familiar.

"Don't bang away, pard. I'm comin' in."

It was then that another voice broke in, this time from another quarter. "The fight is over," came the announcement. "Two more I have shot. If that is all we do not have any fear now."

"Hey! What's all this?" Frazer grunted. "I thought I was shootin' this out alone. Who busted in on the scrap?"

Wenslow was staring suspiciously toward the unseen voice. "I didn't get into it," he growled. "Musta been this other gent. Hello! Come out and let's take a look at ye."

Gonzales Reveals Self As Third Man in Fight

The pine boughs parted and a slight figure stepped into view. Frazer let out a grunt of pain and surprise. "Gonzales! What are you doing here?"

The little Mexican smiled quietly. "I am the suspicious one," he confessed. "This morning I hear about a bullet which is important to many people. I know you have visited Senor Bartell and I think you have it. Then the men who claim to be my friends think different. When my back is turned they send some of their number out here in a hurry. I think I should come and see what happens. I do not like my friends to deceive me."

Frazer knitted his brows perplexedly. "So what's your pitch, Gonzales? Did you shoot that lanky jasper?"

"And Senor Snagg. I can but credit you with the final touch. Already I have wounded Snagg."

Frazer swayed dizzily, fighting off the blackness as the two men helped him to his feet. Then he took a fresh lease on life and stepped out a little more steadily. "Let me walk," he insisted. "We'll do better that way, I'm not so bad off."

It was only when immediate needs were attended to that anyone brought up the subject of the battle. Then it was Helen Bartell who asked the question. "Who were those men, and what did they mean by attacking us?"

Frazer started to reply, but the little Mexican interrupted smoothly. "You must rest, my friend," he said with the utmost politeness—and a notable lack of the accent which had marked his speech last evening. "It is better that I tell. The lady knows the plans of her father?" Frazer decided that Gonzales turned his accent off and on at will. The man actually spoke excellent English.

Helen nodded. "I know. But what does this have to do with my father?"

The little man's eyes twinkled briefly as he stole a glance at Frazer. "Perhaps you do not know that two governments are interested in those plans your own government sent two men to investigate. One of them learned something of importance, but was killed before he could report. The other one is our wounded compadre here."

She turned to stare at Frazer. "Then you're really a goverment agent?"

He shook his head slightly. "I'm not telling the yarn. This is the Gonzales version you're hearing."

"Very well. We know then that Senor Bartell's plan was under scrutiny by two governments. Also it became the center of what you call the great doublecross. One Vasquez, pretending to work with the Bartell people, secretly planned to betray them and take everything for himself. Still another Mexican, one Candino, planned an even more complicated betrayal. Both men found it easy to place their agents in Mesa Verde where they could become familiar with the plans of Senor Bartell."

"I notice you're not advertising your own connection," Frazer said significantly."

"Have you done so? No. Then I keep my own consel for the present."

FOLKS HAVE TO FEEL WELL TO DO A GOOD DAY'S WORK

HADACOL Helps Folks Troubled With Poor Appetite, Tired-Out Feeling and Sleeplessness Caused by an Upset Stomach, If Due to Lack of Vitamins B1, B2, Niacin and Iron in System

Too many folks put off doing something for themselves when they don't feel as good as they should. But when they don't feel up to doing their work the situation demands immediate action. Bert Baldwin, Jr., 1838 Golden Gate Avenue, San Francisco, California, works in a rope factory and for a time he had been feeling tired, didn't sleep well at night and had no appetite. He heard how HADACOL could help folks with conditions like these when due to lack of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron in the system and began taking it. Now he says he feels like working every day. Here is his statement:

"I have tried HADACOL, and it helped me in many ways. Before I took HADACOL I was tired and I did not feel like working and I could not sleep well at night. I did not have a good appetite. After taking the first two bottles I began to eat a good meal three times a day. I am no longer tired and I sleep well all night long. I am 23 years old. I have told my friends what HADACOL has done for me. I feel like working every day since I am taking HADACOL."

Yes, HADACOL has helped many folks of all ages, from all walks of life to feel good again when their ailments were due to deficiencies of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron. That's why HADACOL is America's favorite family formula.

HADACOL makes it possible to actually relieve the real cause of poor appetite, sleeplessness due to an upset stomach and that tired feeling when due to lack of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Iron and Niacin in the system.

AND LISTEN TO THIS! Continued use of this great HADACOL not only gives continuous complete relief but helps keep such distress from returning when caused by such deficiencies. Now that's the kind of product folks have been looking for . . . the kind to buy and start taking at once.

HADACOL's wonderful Vitamins and Minerals come in liquid form and are quickly absorbed and assimilated in the blood, ready to go to work at once.

HADACOL Is So Effective

Because HADACOL helps build up the hemoglobin content of your blood (when Iron is needed) to carry these precious Vitamins and Minerals to every organ and to every part of your body.

You may have tried other Vitamin preparations or other Vitamin and Mineral preparations, so we make you this offer. Try a bottle of HADACOL today if you need Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron. You be the judge. If you do not believe that HADACOL is the best Vitamin and Mineral preparation you have ever taken, we will gladly send you back your money. That's our positive money-back guarantee. You take no chances.

So be fair to yourself. Don't go through life suffering from poor appetite, tired-out feeling and sleeplessness when due to deficiencies of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Niacin and Iron, when relief may be as close at hand as your nearest drugstore.

Refuse Substitutes

There is only one HADACOL. Don't let anyone tell you something else is "just as good." Insist on genuine HADACOL. You risk nothing because HADACOL is sold on a strict money-back guarantee.

Finance Drive Closes Oct. 1

The closing day of the 1952 Boy Scout Campaign is Oct. 1st, O. T. Ness, campaign chairman, stated that from the way returns have been reported it looks as if Holt will have a a very successful drive this year. Mr. Ness also stated that in the event you have missed and wish to make a contribution to the Boy Scouts of America, Myron Gunheim, Edgar Wegge and Walter Stienhauer will be available to receive it.

DID YOU KNOW

That there is a potential field of over 23,220 boys who are of Cub and Scout age in the Lake Agassiz Council.

That 12,000 boys want to be in the Scout program, but only 3,700 are in because of inadequate program.

That a gift of $12.50 will insure a satisfactory experience for one boy in scouting for one year.

That it costs $750.00 a year to keep a boy in a state institution and that any boy, rich or poor, is susceptable to influence of association and environment.

That 26 merit badges are farm merit badges.

That requirement in equivalent 4-H club projects may be substituted to earn merit badges in the farm group.

Then when you make your generous contribution to the Boy Scouts of America you are helping some boy become better acquainted with our Demobratic way of life.

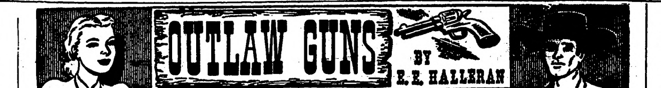
DOAN'S PILLS



OUTLAW GUNS

BY E. E. HALLERAN

THE STORY SO FAR: Events have reached a climax in the mystery of the location of the munitions store. Dan Frazer and his companions, lovely Helen Bartell, Wenslow and Rafferty, have discovered the cache in a tunnel of The Little Bear copper mine. Candino's bandits discover them there and launch an attack to seize the guns and ammunition. The four besieged persons put up such a successful defense that the bandits call for a truce. Kranz, the big German, comes out for a parley and asks them to surrender. They refuse. The fighting continues sporadically during the night. Then, following a lull the bandits attack in full force and prepare to rush the mine entrance.

CHAPTER XIX

It was another hour before the next attack came. It was much like the earlier one except that there were two attacks now instead of one. Frazer and Wenslow concentrated on the main force while Helen and Rafferty banged away at the men who had slipped past into the upper gulch. Again there was a heavy curtain of fire thrown up by the bandits, and this time they seemed to be doing a little more accurate shooting. Frazer knew a brief flash of pain as a bullet grazed his right shoulder, and he could hear a grunt of pain from Wenslow. The little man continued to fire, however, so he asked no questions.

Then Helen's voice rang out in alarm. "Some of them got through," she called. "I saw them duck into the mine."

"Hold your fire," Rafferty shouted back. "Hand over the stuff."

Frazer heard the words and wondered what the pair were trying to do. He did not take time to look, however. The dim valley below him seemed to be full of running men, and he spent his time grimly in trying to stop as many of them as possible. Evidently word had been flashed to the bandit army that some of their advance guard had broken through the defense and were in possession of the tunnel. Now the others were dashing forward to arm themselves.

Explosion Destroys Ammunition Stores

Then Rafferty's voice came sharply. "Git down, everybody. I'm goin' to strike a light. Keep down."

"And get back against the cliff," Helen shouted, her voice high pitched in her tense excitement.

He had just slid into position against the cliff face when a match flared and he caught a glimpse of Rafferty setting fire to something which looked like a paper bag with a fuse in it. Bullets spattered against the rocks as the light flickered, but then Rafferty took careful aim and tossed his paper bomb over the side of the parapet. Instantly he slid back against the wall and there was a split second of silence as the firing ceased entirely. Then a blaze of light illumined the valley and they could hear a loud puff which Frazer concluded was the burning of free gunpowder.

"Stay down," Helen warned, her voice almost immediately drowned by a heavy explosion which rocked the cliff. Chunks of rock crashed down upon the ledge or bounced beyond it, their reverberations covering the shrill cries which came up from the gulch itself. For a moment Frazer wondered whether they would all be entombed or tumbled down to the valley floor, but the rock fall ceased quickly and the ledge was still in place.

"Now give it to 'em again," Rafferty shouted, springing back toward the outer edge. "Hit 'em while they're rattled."

The mine storehouse had caught fire and the flames licking up its dry sides lit up the scene of destruction below. Men were fighting each other blindly in an effort to escape from the disaster which had overtaken them so devastatingly, and the riflemen on the ledge took full advantage. Neither reason nor sentiment dictated a policy of mercy now. They had to hit hard and insure their victory if they could. From the outer edges of the lighted area outlaw riflemen fought back, but there was no such volume of fire as had been the case just a few minutes earlier. Candino's cutthroats were in full retreat.

"What the hell happened?" he heard Wenslow ask. "Worked like a charm," Rafferty chuckled happily. "We kin thank our lucky stars there was a gal on our side what had a smart idea. "That's what we was cookin' up down there when we almost got nabbed by that first attack."

"What was it?" Wenslow asked impatiently.

"Gunpowder. There was a lot of it in the stores, ammunition for some o' them old muskets, I reckon. We busted open all the kegs but one and spread the stuff all over the floor o' the tunnel and out into the valley. Left one keg full, but open. Then we made a paper bomb and brought it up with us. When the bandits rushed the cave I lit the bomb and tossed it over into the powder we'd spilled all over the ground. It set fire to everything and blew up the keg full. Sounded to me like we musta caught a whole passel o' rats in our trap."

Dan awoke at the first signs of dawn, guiltily aware that he had been resting while his companions held the fort. Somewhat hazily he remembered that there had been a conference before he fell asleep and that Wenslow's wounded arm had been bandaged. Otherwise the night battle seemed like a something out of a particularly gruesome nightmare. Only the blue smoke rising from the smouldering embers of the storehouse told him that he had not dreamed any part of it.

"What's happening?" he demanded promptly.

"Nothin' much," Rafferty told him, looking around through weary, red-rimmed eyes. "A couple o' rannies slipped in here about a hour ago and I let 'em come. When they seen that the shaft was blocked they hustled away again. I don't reckon we'll git any more attacks. There ain't nothin' for 'em to want now."

Helen came across to Frazer's side, the drawn weariness and horror in her eyes telling their story. "Feeling all right?" she asked, trying to put up a cheery front.

"I think you'd better kiss me now," she said quietly, ignoring the old prospector's tone.

"Feeling fine, General," he assured her with a grin. "That was a master stroke of yours. We can all thank you for our lives, I think."

"I'm sorry I didn't blow the place up sooner," she retorted. "It might have saved all this if we had let them know there wasn't anything here for them to steal."

Bandit Army Decamps As Cavalry Arrives

He studied her gravely. "You're red-eyed. You're dirty. You're disheveled. And you're wonderful. Shall I kiss you now or wait until we're alone?"

"Good grief!" Wenslow exclaimed in complete disgust.

"I think you'd better kiss me now," she said quietly, ignoring the old prospector's tone. "I'll really believe you mean it if I get kissed when I'm looking as badly as I do now."

Ignoring the banter of the two men they slipped into each others' arms, but their moment was a brief one. A crackle of rifle fire broke out from the lower canyon and Rafferty shouted a warning. "Get ready. They're beginning' to move down there."

In the gray light of early morning they could see the thinned ranks of the bandit army starting into motion. It was a retreat, however, the defeated outlaws firing as they rode. For some minutes the watchers on the ledge could not see any other movement the valley, but finally the last bandit had disappeared and then the meaning of it all became clear. Other horsemen appeared out of the timber and Wenslow set up a shout of sheer joy.

"Bluecoats, by cracky! They got 'em on the run!"

United States Cavalrymen were swarming down into the gorge and taking up the chase. Evidently they had come over the ridge during the night, feeling their way people who had come down from down into the gulch for this dawn assault. Frazer counted them as they came out of the trees and disappeared on the trail of the fleeing bandits. "Three troops," he estimately cooly. "That ought to be plenty to handle a gang of scared thugs."

In a little over an hour, a tired lieutenant and six troopers cantered up the gulch to meet the four the ledge. The officer looked wonderingly about him at the scene of carnage in the valley, then he looked appreciatively at Helen Bartell. Touching his hat brim smartly he asked, "Anything we can do to help, miss?"

"I think you've done it," she replied with a smile. "Just now we're anxious to know what happened to our recent enemies."

He grinned a little at her businesslike tone. "Offhand I'd say about the same thing that happened to the rest of these scoundrels. We harried them to the border, and they ran squarely into a strong force of Rurales posted at the south end of the valley. Apparently the Rurales were not interested in taking prisoners."

The lieutenant nodded, then looked around at the three smoke-grimed men. "Which one is Frazer?" he asked abruptly.

Frazer identified himself, expecting a message from his superior. Instead the officer frowned slightly. "There's a funny sort of message for you from a Captain Gonzales of the Rurales. He says to tell you that you're a hard man. I might add that he said it with a decent enough grin. Then he added, 'Tell Frazer it will be well if he forgets about Inez and me. We would like to forget Senor Bartell.' I hope it makes some sense to you."

Grimy, Ragged Helen Accepts a 'Proposal'

Frazer smiled thoughtfully. "I think I understand, lieutenant. Do you happen to know who I am and why I'm here?"

"Yes. We knew that when our riding orders came."

"Good. Then I can ask you to do something for me. Try to forget "about the message you just gave me."

The lieutenant looked puzzled, but he managed to return Frazer's smile. "Consider it forgotten. Now tell me just one thing. How many men did you have when you fought this battle?" His gesture indicated the scene of carnage around them.

"You're looking at us," Frazer told him. "Privates Wenslow and Frazer of the infantry. Generals Bartell and Rafferty of the artillery and strategic staff. You can trot out the medals any time now."

He sat down then, a little too tired to carry on with the pretense. The soldiers swung away to meet other blue clad riders who were pelting into the valley, and Frazer had time to see that Derek Bartell, Ed Delaplane and Carson Emery were among the approaching troopers. Then he switched his attention to the girl, who had knelt beside him.

"Thanks," Helen said briefly.

"For what?"

"Don't try to play innocent. I know what you're doing. You propose to report this thing in such a way as to save my father. Don't think that I don't appreciate it."

"Why not?" he retorted. "Our friend Gonzales made the offer and he's the only one who's likely to stir up a fuss from that side of the line. We keep quiet about him—and his girl friend—playing spy in Mesa Verde and he makes no charges against your father. That seems reasonable enough, particularly when we consider that your father was a cat's-paw in the deal anyway. I reckon everybody will be happy enough just to have that Candino crowd wiped out."

"But there will surely be talk."

"Not from anyone who matters. The only real plotter left after the fight at your ranch was Kranz. Now he's dead. I had him in my sights just after the explosion last night!"

She shuddered a little and his hand went out to seize her stained fingers. "Forget it all," he advised gruffly. "There's another matter we ought to talk about. Do you think it's fair to keep Ed Delaplane and Sally Chew in a dither all the time?"

"What do you mean by that?"

"Don't be coy. Ed's still a little giddy about you—naturally enough. You better tell him. Let him down easy. Tell him you're marrying me so I'll have to keep quiet about my new father-in-law."

She chuckled with something like her old humor. I suppose that's the nearest thing to a proposal I'll ever get from a misguided individual like you."

"Probably. But what can you expect? You've got a dirty face and you're practically in rags from the cactus and rocks. When a girl's such a mess as you are she can't expect anything really romantic, you know." "Then I'll reserve my answer," she said, with immense dignity.

"Fair enough," he agreed. "You get all prettied up and I'll come around wearing my perfume. Then we'll . . ."

The smudged face so close to his was comically ferocious as she looked him squarely in the eye. "If I ever smell that perfume on you again," she warned grimly, "I'll punch you right in the nose."

"Now you're talking like a perfect lady," he chuckled. "You'd better kiss me while the mood is upon you."

She did.

This is the time of year when the thrifty home owner spruces up his garage, fences and garden houses, replacing panes of glass and nailing up loose boards. A smooth coat of gleaming paint does wonders in making these structures an asset instead of a detriment to the appearance of the house.

Baby Blue Eyes

Your baby can recognize you at the age of six months. All babies are born with blue eyes. It is normal for a baby's eyes to have little or no coordination in the early months of life, but if the condition persists after the first half-year professional aid should be sought. At birth, a baby's eye is about two-thirds of the size it will be in maturity. Like the brain, the eye reaches its maximum size long before the rest of the body. It is usually full-grown by the tenth year. The blue eyes of the newborn baby change color in many cases within the first year.

Stabilized Prices

Over $35 billion of goods are sold annually in the U.S. under various legal forms of resale price maintenance, which permits trade-mark owners to establish the minimum prices at which their products are to be sold. Items sold under the fair trade method in 12 retail fields, notably drug stores, account for only $5 billion. Other price-maintenance methods have sales of $30 billion a year, including consignment selling, which all newspapers and magazines practice, and exclusive dealerships, used extensively in the auto industry.

Pruner's Delight

A pruner has been developed that will give a clean cut without mashing the end of the stem. The pruner's cutting edge closes between parallel guards on the opposing blade which prevents the usual injury. Also, the head of the shears is sharply angled to give more power to the bite with less strain on the wrist. It has a tool-steel knife blade and pistol-grip handles. The pruner weighs less than half a pound, yet has a 600-pound bite.

Big Business

The Japan Central Post Exchange operated by the United States Army and which supplies servicemen with tobacco, soap, razor blades, and many other necessities, now has 36 branch exchange outlets in Korea. In a recent month, sales in these Korean outlets amounted to $1,130,000.00. A total of 625 long tons of merchandise is being shipped to Korea each two weeks to meet the demand.

Going Up

Class I railroads, according to estimates, by the Interstate Commerce Commission, will make capital expenditures of nearly $650,000,000 in the first six months of 1951 for locomotives, new freight cars and other transportation equipment, an increase of 51.5 per cent above those made in the first half of 1950.

Strength Important

High potency in an antimalarial drug is very important in its use. A drug like the chlorophenyl diaminopyrimidine need be taken in very small amount. The amount necessary is so small that unpleasant side effects and toxic reactions are avoided, and the cost of treatment is very low.

Oyster Roast

Oyster roasts are traditional along the inland waterway in North Carolina. Bivalves are placed on an iron grating over a fire and are ready in minutes. During the war, soldiers from all over the country indulged in this fine eating when they wee stationed along the Carolina coast.

Window Derattler

Automobile window rattles and vibrations can be eliminated, according to Rolexco, Inc., Orange, N. J., with one of the company's new one-piece rubber repair units. The anti-rattle device slips between the inside buffer strip and the window glass.

Feet Breathe

The 100,000 sweat glands on the soles of the foot are able to "breathe" freely through the intricate fibrous network of leather soles. That's why feet feel hot and damp when soles are encased in rubbers or galoshes.

Canning Timetable

If you don't have a canning timetable issued since 1946, you will want to take advantage of the time-saving new rules resulting from research in the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Get the latest canning information from your home demonstration agent, located at the extension office in the county seat.

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD

● Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!

Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon . . . right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, worn-out feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

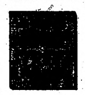
National Kid's Day Dedicated To Welfare of Underprivileged

Of all the special days, weeks and months on the calendar, none is of greater importance to the home towns of the country, now and in the future, than National Kid's Day, to be celebrated this year on Saturday, September 22.

The idea of a National Kid's Day was originated by James M. (Jimmie) Fidler, Hollywood radio commentator and columnist. Now the day is sponsored by over 3,000 Kiwanis clubs in the United States, Canada, Alaska, Hawaii, and the National Kids' Day Foundation. For many years Kiwanis clubs have devoted much of their time and funds in underprivileged child work. By joining forces, Kiwanis and the Kid's Day Foundation have expanded their activities and prevented duplication of effort.



Unlike many special days, Kid's Day is not commercial, although many parents take the occasion to give their children presents as reminders of their love and affection. Its purpose, if followed by the community, can mean better citizenship for the town; it can mean better health and greater happiness for hundreds of children who are already experiencing the reality of a world that is not always kind. Half-way measures, however, will not accomplish these ends.

Specifically, the day was originated to assist underprivileged children to obtain some of the benefits normally enjoyed by more fortunate boys and girls, to focus attention upon the accomplishments of youth, and to interest the general public to a greater dgree in the problems of juvenile delinquency and to help its victims become useful citizens.

However, what the individual community does to aid its children depends upon the needs of that community and must be settled on the local level. Some towns feel the need of properly equipped parks where children can play in safety, and often supervised by experienced personnel. In other towns sight and hearing clinics have been established for children who otherwise could not receive adequate medical attention.

Like many problems today, money is the key to some of the troubles of children. Kid's Day, therefore, is the opportune time to raise funds with which the community can launch or carry on its child welfare program.

It is a day, also for concerts, motion picture entertainment, parades, essay contests, father and son banquets, street parties and a host of other activities designed to focus attention on the problems of the children of America. Here is an opportunity of every town in the country, large or small, to create a little happiness for its children.

If a home town does not have a Kiwanis club or another organization which is sponsoring a Kid's Day celebration, it is not too late for some group to still put over a program, even if hastily organized.

A number of small towns who have Chambers of Commerce or retail merchants organizations sponsor free movies one afternoon during the year. Usually they consist of a number of cartoons, which the kids especially like. The local motion picture house is usually more than glad to offer his services in such a project.

It doesn't take much to please a child. A little time and effort, and not too great a cost financially, will let the kids of the community know they are being thought about and appreciated. In turn it will make a better child and pay dividends to the community that can not be measured in dollars and cents.

National Dog Week Is September 23-29

When one thinks of a child, almost without exception, the picture of his companion—a dog—comes to mind. The two are almost inseparable. It seems appropriate, therefore, that National Dog Week should be observed immediately after National Kid's Day. This year the week of September 23-29 has been set aside for the purpose.

Sponsored by the National Dog Welfare Guild, the program in the past has often been slanted at a "double-track" approach, that is, as it concerned both children and dogs. This year, however, the guild is telling the story of the courage and heroism of dogs.

The following report from Korea tells the story of what dogs are doing in the conflict against Communism:

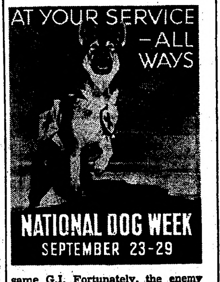
"A small platooon of German shepherd dogs locally acquired and trained is playing its part to slow the great Chinese spring.

"Attached to the first line of the infantry regiment, they are the rebirth of the famous K-9 corps of the last war. Working at outposts and with patrols in no man's land they have already sniffed out Chinese foe many times.

"The other night Corporal Robert Tracy of Portland, Maine, was posted with his dog, Rex, in a fox-hole 300 yards before our main position. Suddenly Rex became rigid and whined low in his throat. The dogs are trained not to bark. Corporal Tracy reported to regiment. Soon after artillery shelled the area. More than 15 enemy Chinese were killed.

"On another occasion, Corporal Ted Nickolby of Yonkers, N. Y., was patrolling before our lines with his dog, Red, and a few other 'doughfoots.' Red tore at his leash and pointed forward like a bird dog. Reenforcements were brought up. A semi-circular trap was prepared. A ten man Chinese patrol walked into the net and in the shooting fury that followed was thoroughly smashed.

"The dogs are fed only once a day and they always work with the same G.I. Fortunately, the enemy with his heavy rice diet gives off an odor quite unlike an American G.I."



Wherever there is news of courage there is often a dog. That is why the National Dog Welfare Guild has adopted as the theme of National Dog Week, "At Your Service . . . All-Ways."

Home Fashion Time Features Furnishings

The story of home furnishings styling and designing, essentially the story of better living, will be told by all branches of the industry during Home Fashion Time, September 20-29.

Local merchants in many communities will present the story of their products in special displays, advertising, and model home exhibits. Everything from carpets to window shades, pots and pans to fine silver will be on display for the home town housewife. Whether or not the homemaker is in the market for new furnishings, the week does offer the opportunity for easy gathering of information that may be useful in future decorating plans.

The tendency today is to live all over the house. Rooms that function only a few hours of the day for sleeping or dining are a burden no busy household should have to carry. It is possible to enlarge your living space without adding on to the house or taking a larger apartment. The home furnishing industry will give many hints to accomplish this during Home Fashion Time.

Recent reports from Korea, laud German shepherd dogs in action. Right, Marine T Sergeant Eddie Evans and "Pola" give nod of approval of 1951 National Dog Week poster designed to prove value and courage of dogs in any emergency.

This Nebraska Farmer Says: "FIRESTONE OPEN CENTERS FOR ME"

"I farm 320 acres of bottom land. Sometimes it gets pretty dry and hard, and other times it gets soft and sticky. I like the Firestone Open Centers for my farm because, no matter what condition the ground's in, I can always depend on them to do a good job. In my opinion they're the best all-around tires a farmer can use."
Glenn Stauffer, Meadow Grove, Neb.

AMONG THE OPEN CENTER BUYERS MORE AND MORE FARMERS CHOOSE Firestone CHAMPIONS

FROM across the road all open center tires look about the same, but from a tractor seat farmers soon see why the Firestone Open Center outpulls all other open center tires.

Watch a Firestone Open Center in operation. You can see how the sharp taper of its bars makes them bite their way into the ground . . . You can see how the curved design of the bars makes them cup the soil for a stronger hold . . . You can see how the Flared Openings between the bars let the soil fall free to keep the tread clean. You'll find the Firestone Champion the best open center tire you can use.

Of course there are over a million farmers who would rather have a traction center type of tire, and if that's the kind you prefer, get the one and only Firestone Traction Center.

Now...Electricity and Education Make Farm Life Better than Ever

There is better living all over the Upper Midwest today because farmers and their wives and sons and daughters are being educated to let electricity make life easier for them.

There is better living on these farms today because educators are using electricity to help educate the children — to help throw light into their minds as well as on their school assignments.

Above 10-year-old Frayne Hjelmstad and his brother Larry read from their school book under an electric reading lamp* .. another convenience made possible by the coming of rural electric power.

"The lighting in the rural schools today is much better than when I went to school," says their mother, Mrs. Elmer Hjelmstad. The Hjelmstads, members of Nodak Rural Electric Cooperative, live 9 miles west of Reynolds, N. D.

Thanks to rural electricity, boys, girls and their parents can read, write, study or entertain themselves in a number of other new ways because they have dependable rural electric power.

This week the Minnkota Power Cooperative system, including you and you local electric cooperative, celebrate the progress of rural power, its benefits to farmers, and the opportunities it holds for the future. Truly, electricity and education have combined to forge a new life for farmers throughout the Minnkota area.

September 21 is a milestone which could well be written into the history books of North Dakota and Minnesota in red letters. It symbolizes 10 years of achievement — just a beginning as history goes — and just a beginning as rural power is concerned.

Macaroni was so popular in George Washington's time that the name became a byword for anything good or excellent (as in the old song, "Yankee Doodle" . . . stuck a feather in his hat and called it "macaroni".

Classes of Fungi

Fungi are divided into two classes, those which live by devouring dead and decaying plant and animal material, and those which are parasitic, like the most common diseases of plants. The former outnumber the latter.

HOMER CROY'S
Jesse James
WAS MY NEIGHBOR

CHAPTER I

On the old James farm near Kearney, Missouri, are the sworn papers of the 'tobacco bride.' She was Zerelda E. Cole, the mother of Frank and Jesse James. She was only sixteen, a minor, and Robert James, who wanted to take her in marriage, didn't have enough worldly goods to indicate he could support her. So he had to put up a bond of fifty pounds of tobacco in order, as the documents say, 'to inter-marry' Zerelda E. Cole. But he wasn't considered a good risk, so he had to get a co-guarantor, and there, on a sworn copy of the official papers, is the latter's name—J. J. Milliken. The girl had a guardian named James M. Lindsay who demanded the last pound of tobacco.

She was attending a Roman Catholic convent in Lexington, Kentucky. (In those days convents were sometimes the only schools available.) She fell in love with Robert James, who was going to Georgetown College, Georgetown, Kentucky. It was a Baptist school and is still in existence.

He was studying to be a preacher; he was twenty-three and a senior. It was the old story; they 'couldn't wait' so they were married while he was still in school. The time was December 28, 1841, and the place was the bride's uncle's (Judge Cole) on the 'Stomping Ground Road' about four miles out of Lexington.

The bride left the convent and came over to live with her husband. Some way or other he managed to keep his mind on his studies and managed to graduate. Now what was he to do?

Young Couple Locates Near Kansas City

His mother had gone to Missouri, so the young minister and his bride trekked after her. His mother had located in Clay County, not far from Kansas City, and thence went Mr. and Mrs. Robert James, wondering what the world had in store for them. It had a great deal indeed. That young bride, as the years went by, saw unfold before her one of the most amazing dramas ever to be played in America. She was picked up by a force far greater than herself and carried along to a tragic and moving end.

The young minister got hold of some land and started both to farm and to preach, which, in that day, was not at all uncommon. A son came along on January 10, 1843; they named him, rather impressively, Alexander Franklin James. He was soon to become 'Frank,' and hereafter, in this book, he will be only that.

The first house was about a quarter of a mile from the one where the father and mother soon moved. This latter house still stands and is known as the James home. Heartbreak and tragedy—and humor—became part of it. How many anxious nights have dragged by in that old log house! In its early days there were loopholes in the top story. They are now gone. The house has been changed some since Frank was taken there as a lad. But not much. For the most part it stands just as it did when the young couple moved into it.

There, in what they called the 'new house,' Jesse James was born. He was named after two uncles: Jesse Cole (his mother's brother) and Drury Woodson James (his father's brother). And now the date: September 5, 1847.

Young Robert James organized two neighborhood congregations into churches. One was the Providence Church, the other was New Hope. He preached at them both and they both stand today. Not only this, but he was a 'traveling preacher'; he went to other churches in the county where he held 'revivals' and 'protracted meetings.' His wife—who had gone to the convent—seems to have supported him wholeheartedly. She was, all her life, a religious woman. And so was her son Jesse religious; sometimes, before he went on a 'raid,' Jesse read the Bible. Frank James was not of this turn of mind. He liked politics and—strangely enough — Shakespeare. Frank's education was scanty; he added to it by reading and studying Shakespeare. Jesse thought it was boring. Jesse was the man of action; Frank the student. This must not be thought of in terms of today, when Shakespeare study is wide and deep, but in terms of that day. Sometimes, when the Boys were hiding out, Frank would sit and read Shakespeare. This disgusted the other members of the gang. They said he would never get any place as a bandit. Once, in later years in Baltimore, Frank went to see a Shakespeare play, and as a result was almost captured.

A daughter was born—Susie, two years younger than Jesse. Then a boy who lived only a month. (That is all there ever were of the James children.) So there was the little log cabin and there were the three children; and there was the young minister engaged in farming and plowing, and the world ahead seemed to lie as straight as a furrow.

Now there came an unexpected turning in the furrow. In the very town where he had helped establish William Jewell College, covered wagons were then being outfitted for far-away California. The Gold Rush was in the air; it was everywhere. Go west, get rich. And so Robert James joined up and started on the long journey. It proved to be a long journey, indeed, for he never came back. He died and was buried near Marysville, California. Once, years later, Frank went there to see if he could find his father's grave, but failed. And so passes the young preacher-educator-farmer.

He got a taste of fighting at Wilson's Creek. It was the fiercest battle ever fought in Missouri, and Frank James's side won.

He never dreamed the story his two sons would give the world.

With three children on her hands, the young widow looked about her and married a neighbor named Benjamin Simms, a farmer, on September 30, 1852. She was married in Kearney and the man who performed the ceremony was the Reverend Franklin Graves. But the marriage didn't turn out well. Simms was sixteen years older. The chief reason, however, seems to have been the way he treated Frank and Jesse. She said, later, that he was cruel to them and once whipped Frank. In those early days, divorce was not a matter lightly to be entered into, but she was preparing to go ahead when Benjamin Simms died.

Twice a Widow, She Marries Again

It was not long until she took a third chance, this time with a fellow Kentuckian named Dr. Reuben Samuel. He had come to Missouri from near Samuels Station, Kentucky, where his family was a proud one. He was a doctor-farmer, as often the case in the early days in this southern fringe of the Middle West. Search of the marriage records bureau of Clay County shows that Reuben Samuel and Zerelda Simms were married September 26, 1855, by Ellis Williams, justice of the peace. (For some reason or other, the marriage was not recorded till December 17 of that year.)

(A word as to the spelling of the name. It was really 'Samuel' and was spelled that way on the marriage license and it is spelled that way on the tombstone in the little cemetery at Kearney. But the neighbors called him 'Samuels' and the newspapers referred to the family as the Samuels family, so, in this book, I am using the spelling most frequently found; from now on Zerelda will be Mrs. Samuels, as she was indeed to everybody in that section, and later, when she became the central figure of a national drama, to everybody in America.)

But the thing which worked upon Jesse's life as a boy and played perhaps the largest part in making him what he became, was not something personal out of his home life but something broader and wider and out of the history of America as it was then. Students of the period say that there was more bitterness during the Border Warfare between Kansas and Missouri than in any other phase of the warfare between the states. It arose over whether Kansas should come into the Union free of slave. Apples of bitterness grew on that tree. Neighbor was set against neighbor, family against family, brother fought brother. The warfare began about the time of the Kansas-Nebraska Act in 1854, and continued up to and through most of the Civil War. The people of Missouri, who in Jesse's section were largely Southern sympathizers, marched over the border and killed all the Kansans they could. The Kansans marched right back.

The people of Missouri were called 'Bushwhackers,' a title very appropriate, for they whacked with their rifles from ambushes in timber and covert. The Kansans were called 'Jayhawkers,' after the Jayhawker bird. There never was such a bird on land or sea, but the name got started and it's still going. Sometimes the armed bands were called 'Redlegs,' this from the red-morocco leggings they wore in the early days. These bands, on each side, were really guerrillas; they were not attached to the regular uniformed forces, but operated separately; they were their own bosses and rode and robbed and slaughtered as they pleased. The leaders of the Kansas men were General James H. Lane and General Jennison. The military leaders of the Missourians were William C. Quantrill, William F. Anderson, and George Todd. Anderson was called 'Bloody Bill,' which was almost praise, considering what a scoundrel he was. But, compared to Quantrill, Anderson was a Sunday-school teacher with cookies in his pocket. This will give an idea of Quantrill: In 1863 he rode into Lawrence, Kansas, with his bloody legionnaires (Frank James was one of them) and ordered every male shot to death and their houses burned. When the day was done, so were one hundred and eighty-two men. Bloody Bill Anderson attacked a railroad train at Centralia, Missouri, found twenty-three Union troops aboard, captured them, lined them up alongside the railroad track, and shot them to death. Not pleasant reading, but that was the way things were in the Border War.

Bitterness Existed Between Two States

The warfare was carried into the homes, not just of the town people, but of the farmers as well. Suddenly one side would swoop down on a farmer and demand to know if he had anyone there from the other side. If he had, they shot him. If he hadn't, they wanted to know where their enemies might be. It was bad business. It is impossible to overstate the bitterness of this warfare between two sister states. It was as black a mark as has been made on American history — this ghastly matter of riding across an imaginary line and killing people just because they lived on the other side.

The very heart and center of this bloody business of the 1850's was two counties in Missouri—Jackson (where Kansas City is), and Clay. And it was in the latter that the Jameses lived. Mrs. James, being from Kentucky, was an ardent Southerner. She had that fiery temper; she had ideas about who was right and she spoke them. Union sympathizers were scoundrels; Southerners were God's people. (Curiously enough, the James family had no slaves. They acquired two colored people later, who worked at the house and on the farm, but this was after the slaves had been freed.) She had many neighbors who were Northerners; she told them where they could go. But they did not want to go there, highly as she recommended it. It all made her talk louder; neighbors warned her to be careful, but with her nature she could not be cautious-tongued. Dr. Samuels was thoroughly Southern, too, but he didn't take it out in the road and show it.

Every day Frank and Jesse listened to this; the result was inevitable. They played 'Hang Old Jim Lane' and they named stumps 'John Brown' and lammed stones at them. In this atmosphere they grew up.

When Fort Sumter was fired on, Frank joined up as fast as he could manage it; he was eighteen. He enlisted under General Sterling Price in the Missouri State Guards, a Confederate force in a state that had come into the war on the side of the Union. In almost no time at all he got a taste of fighting, at Wilson's Creek near Springfield, Missouri, less than a month after the Battle of Bull Run. It was the fiercest battle ever fought in Missouri, and Frank James's side won.

Frank came back to the James farm elated with victory. There is no record of what his mother said, but it could have been only one thing. Frank talked so long and loud he was seized by the Unionists. There wasn't a place in Kearney to contain him, so he was taken to Liberty (where his father had climbed in the covered wagon to go after California's gold) and was clapped into jail. That was pretty difficult to take. He had just helped win a victory at Wilson's Creek and now he was on the inside looking out.

Painting Over Shingle Stain

QUESTION: The upper half of our house is brown stained shingles. We want to paint them white. How can we do it? Is there any way we can prevent the stain from "bleeding thru?"

ANSWER: If the stain is very old and weathered it may be safe to apply a first coat of aluminum paint and then put on the house paint. But if the stain is fairly recent, it would be well to apply a stain-seal to prevent any possible bleeding-through. Consult your paint dealer, and buy top quality products.

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD

● Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!

Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon . . . right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, worn-out feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

Tips on Tots

The Parents Consultation Service of The Book House for Children maintains that "saying every little boy should have a dog is like saying every child should eat spinach or take dancing lessons." The Service points out that "many small children—particularly those under five years of age, are afraid of dogs and find it emotionally disturbing to have them around." It advises that "unless a child has been reared from babyhood in a home with a dog, his parents should wait until he asks for one before they get it for him."

Gold-Coat

Faced with the problem of finding a high lustre finish with good adhesion to replace unavailable brass plating on zinc alloy and aluminum die cast parts, manufacturers are utilizing gold-colored finishes which closely resemble plated metal. These coatings have excellent adhesion qualities and are scratch-resistant.

Linseed Oil

Wooden tripods will retain their flexibility with an occasional 2/1 coat. Secondhand wood tripods generally need refinishing. Remove the old finish, sand rough spots and sharp edges, and rub with boiled linseed oil. Leave sliding surfaces unfinished, lubricating them with wax or soap.

Paint Domes White

White and light tints do not absorb and hold heat the way dark shades do. Astronomical domes are painted white to minimize the increase in temperature in the daytime. This is done so that the scientific instruments may be maintained at a temperature as constant as possible.

Trainloads of Scrap

Last year the steel industry used nearly 70,000 tons daily of scrap purchased from outside the industry. That was equal to nearly 1,400 carloads a day. The need is greater now. More scrap is vital to maintain and increase high steel output.

Travelers

Dispersion of young spiders is accomplished by "ballooning." The young spiders throw out streams of silk and rise on warm currents of ascending air. They rise as high as 14,000 feet or better and travel hundreds and even thousands of miles.

Premise Kept

Before General MacArthur's triumphant invasion of the Philippines, 4,500,000 book matches with his promise—"I Shall Return"—were dropped from planes. The few copies of these which exist today are valuable collector items.

Buffer Lacquer

Much woodenware and many novelties are finished with buffed lacquer. The film thickness is usually built up to from .003 to .005 inches in thickness which is sufficient to take a good buffed finish and to prevent the buffing wheel from cutting through.

Mystery Solved

Solved at last has been the mystery of the famous jumbo 70-150 Winchester Express cartridge which has baffled gun experts for the past half century. This largest sporting cartridge ever made by the New Haven sporting arms and ammunition company, has baffled the experts since it was first discovered on the 1888 cartridge boards which were common sights in sporting goods stores in the latter part of the last century.

The 70-150 was an experimental cartridge developed for the obsolete Model 1887 lever action shotgun equipped with a special rifled barrel, according to Paul Foster, Winchester ammunition expert in a copyrighted exclusive article in the new edition of the Gun Digest.

This most controversial of all Winchester cartridges was seven-tenths of an inch in diameter. The Model 87 shotgun was the first shotgun Winchester made.

Philip Jay Medicus, leading dealer in obsolete ammunition, estimates that only between 25 and 35 of these rare cartridges are still in existence. One is pictured in his new catalogue, and another in "Cartridges" by Herschel C. Logan, a standard reference work on cartridges. The H. P. White Company of Cleveland has several of these rare cartridges in its reference collection. The most recent sale of a 70-150 Winchester was for $20 for a single cartridge.

The Gun Digest article on "Forgotten Winchester" cartridges also describes 64 other rare and obsolete Winchester cartridges which will be news to the growing army of cartridge collectors.

Curbs Backlash

Ocean City Manufacturing Company has announced something new in backlash controls, the EZ-CAST. It's a small, compact, detachable unit which can be quickly installed on any Ocean City Salt Water Reel having a left side-plate oil cap. It fits all such reels made since 1940 and many earlier models.

The EZ-CAST is completely self-contained, requires no oil or other fluid for operation. It is unaffected by temperature or climatic conditions; will not cut or wear the spool spindle. Once locked in, it will not back off accidentally . . . yet is readily interchangeable for use on other Ocean City reels if desired. Its plastic container may be used for a hook, fly or swivel box.

Record Muskies

For the first time, a resort and fishing region is making an effort to keep track of all legal muskies caught.

It's being done through a season-long musky marathon conducted in Vilas county by Wisconsin headwaters country, the region's new promotion organization.

And the number of fish being reported is astounding everyone—old-time fishermen, guides, resort operators. Near the end of the season's sixth week a total of 842 muskies had been reported.

At that rate—an average of 140 a week—the 22-week season may produce as many as 3,000 of the big game fish reported from Vilas county lakes.

"Naturally, we're not hearing about all the muskies caught," says Merv Clough, executive secretary of the organization. "It's a big job educating everyone up here to the importance of reporting. But more and more are beginning to cooperate, and the count is mounting.

"We will have some mighty important figures and data to analyze by the end of the season."

At his office in Sayner where records are kept on the marathon, Clough reports that chart are being compiled on the lakes producing muskies, lengths and weights of the fish reported, and where possible, the type of lure used on each fish.

Biggest musky reported so far is the 50-pound, 56-inch tiger specimen caught in Lac Vieux Desert by Mrs. Dolores Ott Lapp, wife of Guide Jack Lapp in the Land O' Lakes area.

Other big ones have been reported in the marathon. There have been two weighing 43 pounds, one each at 41 and 40½ pounds, two at 36, and 35 and 34-pounders. A check on the first 500 reported showed an average weight of 12 pounds, and an average length of 36½ inches.

Kentucky Reel

For the first time since modern bait-casting began, a generation of fishermen are growing up who may never have a chance to fish an old Kentucky reel—a genuine B. F. Meek. These were the first multiplying reels ever made, and they were responsible for bait-casting as we know it today. For more than 100 years, Meek reels were known and used around the world. Many old-time fishermen still regard them as the greatest reels ever produced.

Colombo Plan Aids Southeast Asians

Tomorrow's standard of living may be better for one-quarter of mankind because of an economic bootstrap called the Colombo Plan.

This six-year blueprint for development of South and Southeast Asia, sponsored by the British Commonwealth, went into action to lift the well-being of 570,000,000 people. Its $5,230,400,000 budget covers objectives from a dam the size of Hoover Dam to be built in northern India, to free public schools for the children of Singapore.

India, Pakistan, Ceylon, the Federation of Malaya, Singapore, North Borneo, Sarawak and Brunei will spend this money between now and 1957 under the plan, which was drawn up by an international consultative committee meeting in Colombo, Ceylon in Sydney, Australia, and in London during 1950. Burma, Thailand, Indonesia and Indochina have been invited to take part in the program

FERTILIZERS have carryover values that benefit every crop in the rotation, reports the Missouri College of Agriculture, in citing recent tests on the George Stine farm in Ozark County.

As expected, corn yields were higher the year the fertilizer was added. But three years later when the plots were in legume crops, Stine reported four times as much Ladino clover growing on plots fertilized with phosphate and potash as on the unfertilized plot. The difference was even greater on the sweet clover crop. Practically no clover was growing on the unfertilized plot, while there were thick, heavy stands on the fertilized fields.

University of Wisconsin agronomists report that alfalfa yields were 2½ times as big on fields topdressed two years ago with 500 pounds per acre of 0-9-27 fertilizer, as on unfertilized check plots.

RYE, winter wheat and other winter small grains can help you stretch the pasture season this year, give your beef and dairy cattle extra grazing days and cut down costly feed bills.

These special fall crops should be planted early enough to produce good growth, says the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee. They should be planted in grain fields not seeded to legume-grass mixtures.

Adding fertilizer with the seed will get the rye up fast, give you good pasture during the fall and help the crop survive severe weather this winter. Agronomists recommend using a complete fertilizer carrying nitrogen, phosphate and potash at seeding time.

The Middle West Soil Improvement Committee suggests two other steps for making pasture pay maximum returns this fall:

1—Topdress and graze permanent pastures with a complete fertilizer to give fast recovery after the summer heat.

2—Add plant nutrients and graze old meadows that will be plowed for corn next spring.

A topdressing in the spring of nitrogen or of a nitrogen, phosphate and potash fertilizer will spur the growth of pasture grasses and legumes. It will enable you to get cattle out on the fields earlier and reduce expenses of barn feeding.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Skip Makes a Slip

Miss Gilbert, the teacher, was telling me how Skip Lawson almost went to sleep in her physics class.

She noticed him nodding and—since they were discussing electricity—said in a loud voice: "Now maybe MR. LAWSON will explain what electricity is." Skip started up, looked around wildly, and blurted out, "Gee! I used to know, but I forgot."

"What a loss to science!" sighs Miss Gilbert. "No one to this day knows what electricity really is, and here we have a genius who could explain it—but forgot!"

From where I sit, I hope this taught Skip that you're better off if you admit you don't know all answers. Some grownups haven't learned that yet—like the ones who are always telling other people what's best and what's right and what's wrong. I like a temperate glass of beer, myself, but if you prefer buttermilk I won't argue. I've seen too many "know-it-alls" turn out to be wrong!

THE RACE THAT LASTED 10 YEARS ...STILL GOING!

It's the 10-year old race to keep electric generation ahead of the growing demand for more electric living. Otter Tail's output of electricity today is more than twice what it was in 1944* — but Otter Tail customers use twice as much electricity now as they did then.

To match this increased demand, the Otter Tail Power Company has borrowed millions of dollars for the construction of new plants and more transmission lines.

This costly expansion program is being achieved without help from the government, without one penny from the taxpayer's pocket.

It's made possible through the savings of thousands of small investors who believe that part ownership in private enterprise is the best way of showing their faith and preference for our American system.

Your electric company -- a development of free enterprise through private initiative -- is your best source of low-cost electricity.

We got our Mother Hubbard Seatwork books on Friday so now we have 2 sets.

Conley Ness had perfect score in every exercise in Weekly reader last week. Lorna, Jane and Orvis made only 1 or 2 mistakes.

Good Repair Lumber

A farmer who doesn't keep a stack of home-grown, custom-sawn boards often pays a high price for good repair lumber. Usually cheaper boards would serve the purpose and save him money. The man who cuts his low grade logs and hauls them to the mill for custom sawing gets his repair lumber for about one-third of the cash cost of the same lumber purchased outright. He adds that there are few wet weather jobs around the farm that will pay more money.

Skunk Story

The common skunk weighs about an ounce at birth which occurs in the spring. There are usually five in the litter. The eyes of the babies are closed when they are born, and they have a fine hair covering that shows the adult pattern. They nurse from six to seven weeks, and during the latter part of this period they begin to accompany the mother on her foraging trips. The mother alone takes care of the young. In late summer or early autumn the family disbands.

Cigarette Fires

Thousands of home fires are caused each year by lighted cigarettes which are tossed into trash piles, so fire safety authorities recommend that all household waste materials be kept in galvanized steel garbage cans. The experts say metal construction and close-fitting covers make galvanized garbage cans completely fireproof.

Turpentine from Dixie

Two thirds of the world's supply of turpentine comes from the pine forests of our Southern States. The principal use of this liquid is for thinning paints and varnishes. After the trees are tapped for the gum they contain, the substance is strained and distilled. The distillate is turpentine and the residue in the still is rosin.

Linseed Oil Elastic

Linseed oil is widely used in the manufacture of exterior paints. As it dries, the oil solidifies and forms an elastic substance on the surface to which it is applied. The quality of elasticity possessed by this substance allows the paint coating to expand and contract with the surface to which it is attached.

Wards off Weather

Asbestos roof cement is a very heavily pigmented compound that seals flashings, seams or patches in a roof. It is usually made from tar, an asphalt or a vegetable oil pitch base. In addition, it may contain some drying oils such as linseed, soybean or fish to impart plasticity to the coating.

Terry-Rimmed Goggles

Latest device to aid women in their beauty routine is a pair of shampoo goggles. An enterprising manufacturer has come up with a design for a pair of goggles rimmed with absorbent terry cloth for women to wear during shampoos to keep soap out of their eyes.

Popular Fuel

Lignite has a woody texture, a higher moisture content, and a lower level of energy than bituminous and anthracite. Most of our lignite is used as a fuel to produce electricity, made into a carbon for special uses, and for local fuel.

Hi, Silver!

A new finish imparts a silver mirror-like finish to glass bottles, plastics and metals. It is done by a high vacuum vaporizing process. Aluminum is vaporized and plated onto any material within the tank containing the objects to be coated.

Bog Ore

In 1645—America's first successful blast furnace operated on "bog ore" taken from swamps near Saugus, Massachusetts. This type of ore was used widely on the eastern seaboard until early in the 1800's.

Power on Order

Class I railroads had more new motive power on order on April 1, 1951, than ever before, there having been on that date 1,883 locomotives consisting of 2,420 power units awaiting delivery.

SCANNING THE WEEK'S NEWS
of Main Street and the World

Beef Price Increases Announced; Marshall Retires to Private Life

BEEF PRICES—Harassed small town housewives, who have been fighting a losing battle with the food budget since the beginning of the Korean war, heard the news of a wholesale beef price increase with dismay. OPS authorized the increase of 1½ to 2 cents a pound at the wholesale level. It will mean the home town housewife will pay more for chucks and rounds.

In addition, OPS announced retail price increase on hams, shoulders, and bacon by 1 to 2 cents. Ceiling on pork chops and roasts were recently subject to an adjustment.

Junior Hog Champ

A 13-year-old city reared lad won nearly $600 and carried off top honors in competition with 55 farm youngsters in the 12th annual Chicago Junior Hog Show. Here he is, Carl Silva, Jr., of Dundee, Ill., who never lived on a farm until 5 months ago.

OPS said the new increases will restore fair profit margins to packers. Several had closed in recent weeks because they reported losing money under existing OPS price regulations.

It was estimated the new ceilings represent an average increase of a cent a pound on beef sold by the carcass.

Another order issued by OPS increased the ceiling price on utility grade of live cattle from $21.80 to $23.40 per hundred pounds. This grade is used by canners for the army and some other customers, but represents less than 10 per cent of all beef sold at retail.

FULL SCALE WAR—Military observers believe there is little, if any, chance of Korean truce talks resuming. For the most part they predict increased activity in the fighting, with latest reports confirming this view.

Flame throwers, tanks and artillery were used by the Allies last week in chopping out limited gains in eastern Korea, while in other sectors, U.N. troops beat back large Red attacks.

Gen. James A. Van Fleet, eighth army commander, is reported to have said the Reds at present do not have much of an offensive capability left on the eastern front. He reports Red casualties are running at 20 to 1 in comparison with the Allies'.

Meanwhile, the word war between the Communist and United Nations commands continues. Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway warned the enemy that the admission that an American plane accidentally machine-gunned the Kaesong area recently is "no indication the U.N. command will accept any trumped up Communist charge, no matter how loudly they protest." He referred to Communist charges of previous attacks which the Allies have denied.

A-WEAPONS TRAINING—Some 12,000 soldiers from the home towns of the nation will get a close look soon at what an atomic explosion can do as they undergo training in the tactical use of atomic weapons. The training will be carried out in the Frenchman's Flat proving grounds near Las Vegas where the atomic energy commission set off several atomic explosions some weeks ago.

The maneuvers will be the first time army ground forces have received actual field training with the new "tactical" atomic weapons recently developed by the AEC. The weapons are believed to include guided missiles with atomic warheads and atomic artillery shells.

PAY RAISE—A pay raise of 10 per cent was approved by the senate last week for approximately 1,000,000 federal workers. The house must act on the bill and President Truman must sign it, however, before the money would be forthcoming.

The measure would increase federal employee wages on the average of $307.53 a year, at an annual cost to the government of about $340,000,000. It would grant raises to almost all federal workers except those in the post office department. Postal workers previously were voted increases ranging from $400 to $800 in a senate bill.

NO RUSH BUYING—Merchants in all sections of the country, from the home towns to the big towns, have noticed recently there is no buying rush as there was only a few months ago. Economists have come up with several reasons why rush buying has stopped, but the two main ones seem to be the increased cost of items and the consumer now is buying what he needs, not because he fears future shortages.

During part of 1950 and early 1951 the American consumer went on a buying spree because of predicted shortages. Many of the items purchased were on the installment plan and now the consumer is paying for them. The old fear of shortages no longer worries the consumer because he believes goods will be available.

And because of higher prices many consumers are saving for that rainy day, to pay off debts, and to buy things when prices are readjusted.

TAFT PROSPECTS—Sen. Robert Taft frankly admitted on his recent speaking tour through Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota was a prospecting trip which will have great bearing upon whether or not he will seek the 1952 Republican nomination for president.

"A lot of people say they want me to run, but I want to be sure of the amount of support I am going to have before I make any final decision," the Ohioan said.

THE GENERAL—The acceptance by President Truman of George C. Marshall's resignation as secretary of defense retires to private life a man who has held a unique place in American public life during the past decade, especially in the minds of the people in the home towns of the country. Gen. Marshall inspired confidence in the American people as has no other military man in recent years.

After a long and honorable military career, Marshall rose to new heights as United States chief of staff in World War II. At the end of the war he retired, but was called back by President Truman to head a mission to China in an effort to end the civil war there.

After that fruitless mission he was named secretary of state, during which the government launched the foreign-aid program that became known as the Marshall plan. He resigned that post in 1949. A year ago Truman called him from retirement to take the post of secretary of defense.

Senator Johnson of Texas very well summed up the opinion of the average American's regard for Marshall: "Long after the trivial carping of his detractors has been forgotten, the memory of George Marshall's services will stand as an inspiring monument to future defenders of freedom in the world. Because of his efforts, freedom has survived and will continue to survive."

Quits Defense Post

FARM OUTLOOK

Second Largest Farm Crop Is Expected

Despite unfavorable weather—drought in much of the south and southwest and excessive rain in the midwest—crop production in 1951 promises to be the second largest on record, according to the department of agriculture.

The department reported the volume of all crops was indicated at 133 per cent of the 1923-33 average compared with a record of 138 per cent set in 1948.

In another report, the department predicted livestock marketing will increase this fall to equal or pass the large volume of the fall of 1950. So far this year marketing of livestock has been running behind that of last year. Hog slaughtering is expected to levels of a year ago. As a result, prices may be considerably lower.

Fresh Fruit

Fresh fruits should be stored in a cool, dry place. Berries should be spread carefully on trays and sorted, but not washed until prepared for the table.

Woven Fabrics

Closely woven fabrics are best for slip covers because they give greater protection against dust, hold their shape better, wear longer and tailor more easily than do loosely woven materials.

HOMER CROY'S Jesse James WAS MY NEIGHBOR

THE STORY SO FAR: Zerelda E. Cole, mother of Frank and Jesse James, is attending a convent in Lexington, Kentucky, when she meets young Robert James, who is studying to be a preacher at nearby Georgetown College. The two get married and go west to Clay county, Missouri, where they establish a home. Two sons, Frank and Jesse, and a daughter, Susie, are born. The gold rush lures Robert James to California, where he dies. Zerelda then marries Benjamin Simms, who dies, leaving her a widow for the second time. Subsequently she is married again—to Dr. Reuben Samuels, who becomes a real father to Frank and Jesse.

CHAPTER II

His mother came to his rescue. She went to the commander of the Union forces in the county and asked him to release Frank. He agreed to do this if Frank would sign an oath of allegiance and if the Stars and Stripes were flown in the yard of their house. But three days after Frank signed the oath, this officer was moved to another command, and so the flag did not fly. The new commander tried to capture Frank, but Frank 'went into the bush.'

Frank felt he couldn't go back with General Price, so he made a decision that changed both his life and Jesse's: he joined Quantrill's guerrillas.

Jesse remained at home, farming. And then, one day, something dreadful happened.

One day in June, 1863, a squad of Union soldiers rode up to the log cabin that was to see so many scenes of violence and tragedy. Dr. Samuels was busy in the rear; he came around the corner—and his heart must have beat faster when he saw the ominous horsemen.

"What do you want?" he asked.

"We want you," one of the men said. "You and your wife both. You've been talking too much. And your son has joined Quantrill. Not only that but you put up his men when they came through!"

Dr. Samuels tried to defend himself, but what the men had said was true, and Dr. Samuels did not do a good job of it.

Soldiers Brutally Hang Dr. Samuels From Tree

"Where's your wife?"

"In the back yard making soap," answered the dignified doctor.

The men looked at each other significantly; a plan had been prepared and they began to carry it out. One of the men went back to his saddle and returned with a rope. Two others seized the doctor and bound his hands behind his back, the rope was tied around his neck, and they marched him to a coffee-bean tree and threw the end over the limb. The doctor—gasping and struggling—was lifted off his feet. Then the rope was tied and the men calmly marched out to the barn.

The moment they turned the corner of the house, Mrs. Samuels rushed up and untied the rope; the doctor fell to the ground, an inert mass. She worked desperately, loosening the cord from around his burned neck. His eyes opened. He was alive! She helped him into the house. Now he was safe. Or was he? . . .

The men thought young Jesse had hidden in the barn, but he wasn't there. They found him in the field plowing—this blue-eyed lad of fifteen and a half.

"Here's that Quantrill-man's brother," one said.

"We'll learn him, too," said another.

They proceeded at once with what they had in mind. Two of the men seized him and the third began to beat him with a rope. A dreadful scene—grown men lashing a boy—but that was the way it was, for feelings in this border state were deep, especially in this county which was at the dead center of the conflict.

And now, having accomplished their purpose, the men went back to the house. Dr. Samuels was no longer hanging in the yard, but that was all right; his wife had probably carried the body in. So the men got on their horses and rode away.

After a time young Jesse came in. It took only a glance from his mother to know something had happened. She got his shirt off—and there were the welts and blood. And so she took care of both of them, her son and her husband.

Then it was that Jesse made a decision that changed his life, and the lives of many others. He was too young to enroll as a regular Confederate but there was something else.

"Mother, I'm going to join Quantrill."

In September of 1864 Anderson's massacre at Centralia took place. On the afternoon of the same day, September 27th, pursuing Union forces under command of Major A. V. E. Johnson were ambushed, and between 175 and 264 soldiers (the estimates vary), together with their leader, were killed.

Jesse James, it is believed, was the one who shot Major Johnson. This, so far as is known, was the first man Jesse ever killed. The date was twenty-two days after his seventeenth birthday. The boy was getting a good start.

In August, 1864, Anderson brought his men to Rocheport, Missouri, to capture the steamboat War Eagle, which was owned by Northerners. He hid his men behind a tobacco warehouse near the levee, close to where the boat would land.

The men waited silently as the boat came heading in. During the wait one of them became so nervous that he accidentally discharged his pistol. The pilot of the boat, realizing something was wrong, pulled the bell and signaled the engineer to reverse the engines. The boat began to back into the current.

As Jesse got better he began to go to the Baptist church in Kearney; not only that, but he sang in the choir.

The men procured a rowboat and soon came up to the steamer. Just as the first man stood up to go over the gunwales, the pilot blew his right arm off with a shotgun. The rowboat, with the injured man, came back to shore.

Anderson was infuriated and ordered his men to open fire on the steamer and to kill every man, woman, and child.

A young fellow named Lyons, who had joined Anderson only the day before, was shocked at this brutality, and, stepping up to the leader, said, "Captain Anderson, here are my pistols. I cannot make war against women and children."

Anderson glared at him, almost bursting with rage. Then with his pistol he knocked him down and began to kick him. Some women, who had come down to the levee to see the boat land, ran up to Anderson and begged him to stop. Anderson began to argue with them, and while he was doing this the young man got to his feet and managed to run away.

Jesse James Decides To Return to Home

After the trouble with the women was over, Anderson turned to Jesse James and said, "Capture that man I'm going to kill him as an example to others."

Jesse started after Lyons. But he, too, had been shocked by Anderson's brutality and did not press his pursuit and let the young man escape.

The war went on.

Came Easter Sunday at Appomattox. The Confederate soldiers surrendered honorably, but there was the matter of the guerrillas. The bands and contingents were required to come in separately. One of the surrender points was Lexington, Missouri, not far from the old home; and to it Jesse started. The war was over. He could go back to farming.

What happened this morning became important in his life. There has been much confusion about it, but it has been possible to get, from original sources, what seems to be the truth. The person I am indebted to is A. L. Maxwell, Route 2, Lexington, Missouri. His father was a cavalryman in Frost's Division. Mr. Maxwell lives on the land where the event occurred. It was his brother-in-law who obtained the facts concerning it from Barnett Lankford before Lankford's death in the late 'eighties.

The time was April 23, 1865. Jesse was riding with a small group of guerrillas coming to surrender at the Burns schoolhouse. In this group was Jesse Hamlett, a friend. Suddenly they saw a band of five horsemen coming from the direction of Salt Pond Road. These men charged the Southerners, firing on them. Hamlett's horse was killed under him and Jesse James was shot three times—twice in the right breast and once in the leg. But in spite of his wounds, Jesse got his friend up behind him and the two rode away as fast as they could.

It is not known what happened to Hamlett thereafter, but Jesse was so seriously wounded that he had to dismount and crawl off the roadside into the brush. The Union soldiers caught the horse and began to search for him. There was an old abandoned coal mine near, and into this Jesse crawled. When night came on he went to a house which proved to be the home of Barnett Lankford. The latter was a Southern sympathizer and willingly took Jesse in, and there he remained two days. At the end of that time he was able to stay on a horse, painful as this was, so he started toward the Hill place two miles southeast of Mt. Hope, where his wounds were treated by Dr. A. B. Hereford. Lankford's horse was sent back to him by a recently returned veteran of Price's Army, who came with Jesse to the Hill farm.

On the farm was a semi-abandoned log house, in which he hid. When he was again able to travel, he went to his mother's. Jesse had gone through the war without having been wounded, but on the day he was to surrender he was almost killed. The mother received the son who had gone to avenge his stepfather's hanging, her imprisonment, and his own beating, and who had returned with two ghastly chest wounds and a lesser wound in the leg. He was now seventeen and a half.

Jesse went to bed and Dr. Samuels did what he could for him. But instead of getting better, the wound got worse. A tube had to be kept in it. Dr. Samuels thought he was going to die, but his mother did not give up hope, mothers being what they are. Week after week went by, and he was still in bed.

The neighborhood remained filled with bitterness. Jesse belonged to the conquered, and the Northerners made it uncomfortable for him and for his family. Dr. and Mrs. Samuels decided a change would do the boy good, so he was placed in a wagon and taken to the very town where he had gone to surrender, and there carried on a stretcher to a steamboat going up the Missouri River.

He Meets His Cousin, Wants to Marry Her

Why the family chose the town of Rulo, Nebraska, to move to is not known. It may have been having a boom and its future may have seemed all smiles. But in any event it must have seemed a place of cheer to Jesse and his mother and stepfather. He was carried ashore, a house was secured, and Dr. Samuels started practicing medicine. They lived under their own names, for there was no thought of concealment.

Jesse did not get better; day after day he lay in bed, his faithful mother waiting on him. There was no Border Warfare feeling here, no sectional bitterness. But they were not his people. Not Southerners at all.

Finally Jesse said, "Mother, I don't want to die up here in the North. Please take me back."

Dr. Samuels closed out his practice, Jesse was carried to the boat, and the trip home, in August, 1865, was begun. On the way something happened that changed his life.

The family decided to stop and see Dr. Samuels' sister, who was living in Harlem, now part of North Kansas City. So they got off there and Jesse was carried to a rooming house run by his aunt, Mrs. John Mimms. And there Jesse met his cousin Zerelda Mimms, named for his mother. She began to wait on him; and when she came into the room his eyes were upon her eagerly. He began to call her 'Zee.' (His mother was known among the kinfolks as 'Aunt Zerel.')

One day a band marched past the house. Zee went in to open the window so he could hear better, but he was already up and sitting in a chair beside the bed. She pulled his chair over to the window and the two, side by side, watched the band march by.

The mothers began to see "there was something doing,' and sought to discourage it. A sick boy; the girl, his cousin. It would not do.

He began to get better, and his mother put him in a wagon and started back to the old James farm. As the wagon jolted along, Jesse said, "Mother, I want to marry Zee."

"Hush! Don't talk about it. You're too young and you are sick."

Back in the old home place, which Jesse loved all his life, he improved even more. Frank had been farming it, but they were postwar sufferers. Their horses had been stolen. Prices were at starvation levels; it took hard scratching to make a living.

Meanwhile, Jesse had good days and bad days. Sometimes he would be up and around; then his wound would open and he would have to go back to bed. As he got better he began to go to the Baptist church in Kearney; not only that, but he sang in the choir. (It is not known if he did any more praying for Frank.)

Cancer Mortality On The Decline

Encouraging indications of a decline in cancer mortality are reported by statisticians who base their findings upon the postwar experience of millions of industrial policyholders.

Favorable developments in the cancer picture are most evident, the statisticians point out, when the recent trend of mortality is studied according to whether the primary site of the disease is accessible or inaccessible to diagnosis.

For the accessible sites as a group, both men and women in the insurance experience recorded declines in the death rate from 1946-47 to 1949-50, men by 2.4 per cent and women by 7.2. There was a reduction in female mortality from almost all the accessible specific types of cancer.

In the case of the inaccessible sites as a whole, the death rate among women declined 1.1 per cent, but, on the other hand, that among men showed an increase of 4 per cent. However, both sexes showed decreases for such specific sites as the stomach, intestines, other digestive organs, bladder, and liver.

Considerable increases in death rates were recorded for cancers of the lungs and other respiratory areas.

Greatly intensified efforts have been put forth on all fronts since the end of the war to fight cancer. These have included the expansion of diagnostic facilities, the opening of more special cancer hospitals, and intensified cancer research. In addition, the statisticians state "great emphasis is still placed upon early recognition and treatment of the disease."

Good or Bad?

"I had a mighty queer surprise this morning," remarked the stock broker. "I put on my last summer's thin suit on account of this extraordinary hot weather, and in one of the trousers pockets I found a big roll of bills which I had entirely forgotten."

"Were any of them receipted?" asked a pessimist.

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD

● Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!

Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon . . . right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, worn-out feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

HALLOWEEN DROP DOUGHNUTS
ADD 2 pkg. RED STAR Special Active Dry Yeast to ½ cup warm water (110°-115°). Let stand. SCALD ¾ cup milk. Pour into large bowl with ¼ cup sugar, 1 tsp. salt, ½ tsp. each of mace and nutmeg. Blend together and cool to lukewarm. STIR yeast-mixture well and pour into bowl. MIX IN ¼ cup soft shortening, 2 eggs, with 3½ cups sifted flour. BEAT until batter is smooth—about 100 strokes. SCRAPE down dough from sides of bowl. COVER and let rise in warm place until doubled—about 30 minutes. STIR down and let rest while fat is heating to 350° (to test – a 1-in. cube of bread browns in 60 seconds). DROP batter from teaspoon into hot fat. Turn when edges show color, frying golden brown—about 1½ minutes on each side.
DO'S FOR DOUGHNUTS
- DO have fat 1½ to 2-in. deep in heavy pan for shallow fat frying.
- DO keep temperature around 350-375 degrees. Too hot fat forms crust before doughnuts are cooked through, too cool fat means doughnuts will soak up fat.
- DO turn doughnuts when edges show golden brown color.
- DO drain doughnuts on absorbent paper, such as paper toweling, near a warm place.
- DO sugar coat while still warm.

High Wheat Yields, Thick Legume Stands Come From Fall Fertilization, Spring Top Dressing

GETTING high wheat yields per acre involves giving the crop a full feed of plant nutrients, points out the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee. This means adding fertilizer containing nitrogen, phosphate and potash as needed at seeding time this fall and then topdressing next spring.

Then the wheat will have all the nutrients it needs and there will be plenty of plant food for the legume-grass crop seeded in the wheat.

The available phosphate and potash will build strong root systems and help the wheat plants harden off in the fall to resist damage from severe winter weather.

The extra nitrogen in the spring will enable your fields to support more stems for every kernel of wheat planted. You will get more heads per plant and per acre. You will get bigger and longer heads, too, for there will be enough plant food to fill out the kernels. That means more bushels per acre and better quality wheat.

Including phosphate and potash with the nitrogen in the spring top-dressing, says the committee, is especially helpful in wheat seeded to legume-grass mixtures. The nutrients will give the legumes a good start in the spring and offset some of the competition from the wheat.

Fertilizing wheat with the plant food it needs is profitable not only from the standpoint of higher grain and legume-grass yields, but from the soil-building benefits your land receives. Alfalfa and sweet clover in the seeding replenish rundown stocks of organic matter. They put mineralized humus deep down in the subsoil, unlock heavily packed soils and improve drainage and aeration.

Otter Tales

By . . . Reddy Kilowatt

Spent a little time around Harvey, North Dakota, this summer. Stopped in to see S. H. Farrington, the good publisher of "The Harvey Herald" and then went over to the Otter Tail steam plant.

Found the Harvey Kiwanis Club out in force and being shown through the plant by the superintendent, Leo Akers. Listening to Leo, I learned things even I never knew before. "We got three big boilers here, and three steam turbines," said Leo, "and it takes 90,000 tons of coal every year to keep 'em going."

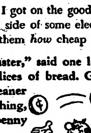
Bob Nygard, Otter Tail area manager, then piped up and said that about 1/6 of the total lignite production of North Dakota is purchased every year by the Otter Tail Power Company. That's a lot of coal — in fact, it amounted to half a million tons in 1950.

Other interesting facts about the Harvey plant: It uses 8,000 gallons of water per minute. And much of the electricity it generates goes to REA which is now hooked to the Otter Tail system at sixty different places.

Well, from learning, I went to teaching. You can now call me Professor Kilowatt, W.D.C. (That W.D.C. is my "degree" — it stands for "Work Doggone Cheap").

In a little white church not far from Harvey I got on the good side of a Ladies Aid group (I also got on the good side of some electrically fried chicken) — and had a chance to tell them how cheap I work.

"I hear you're a whiz with an electric toaster," said one lady. "I sure am," I said. "For 1¢ I'll toast 24 slices of bread. Give me another 1¢ and I'll run your vacuum cleaner for 28 minutes. Or, if you hate dish washing, I'll wash your dishes for less than a penny a day.



"We keep our radio on all day," said another woman, "what does that cost?" I told her 1¢ will run her radio for 3½ hours — and it will keep foods fresh in her refrigerator for 7½ hours. "And if you're cooking the modern way — electrically — I'll prepare a meal for a family of four for an average cost of 3¢ per meal."

They brought on the chicken then, and the cake, and the ice cream. Brother, you can't beat electrically cooked food!

Nation's Food Security Calls for Long Term Soil Fertility Building Program on U.S. Farms

NO FERTILIZER
8-8-8 PLOWSOLE

More and better corn per acre comes from a well-balanced supply of nutrients. Corn (right) had plenty of fertilizer; corn (left) had none.

AMERICA'S food security depends on the use of more fertilizers on more farm soils, declared Dr. William A. Albrecht, chairman of the Soils Department of the University of Missouri.

Pointing out that supplies of natural fertility in the soil are threatened with exhaustion, Dr. Albrecht called for a program that would provide long-term "sustaining" fertility.

The way to get this sustaining fertility, he said, is to put larger amounts of fertilizer deeper down in the soil.

"Starter fertilizer applied near the surface in soils which are not increasingly fertile deeper down," he said, "may get the crop off to a good start. But later on as the roots push down to more moist soil zones, they cannot find enough nutrients to carry the plant through for high yields and a high protein content."

Dr. Albrecht said that greater use of fertilizer will result in higher crop yields per acre and a larger profit margin, since production costs decrease as yields increase.

"While a higher nutritional quality is being brought into larger yields, also," he said, "this will call for more accurate balance of the soil treatments according to soil and tissue tests. Such a balance will result in more efficient use of fertilizers and more profitable returns on the investment in fertilizer."

More fertilizer will be demanded for some time ahead, he declared. At the same time, the return from plant foods will be on a sounder basis when all of the different nutrients are used more effectively both as starter fertilizer and as the sustaining fertilizer.

X-Ray Findings

U.S. public health service experiences with mass x-rays shows that about 1.5 per cent of the 20,500,000 examined annually—or 307,500 persons—would be found in each of the first five years to have reinfection-type tuberculosis requiring further diagnosis.

Odd Guns

For many years the old guns were valued chiefly as keepsakes or collector's items. Now that they have recaptured public interest, Kentucky rifles often bring high prices. And they still shoot true, though many are more than a century old.

Save Flashlight Batteries

Here's a way to extend the life of your flashlight batteries, at least until it is convenient to replace them. When the light starts to die, polish the ends of each battery with fine sandpaper. This removes corrosion and improves contact.

Whale Meat

Eskimos regard raw whale meat as the greatest of delicacies. But thorough cooking, with onions, herbs, tomatoes and savory sauces, is the American or British chef's procedure with the whale. Frozen, cellophane-wrapped whale meat has become a common item in many a grocery store across the Atlantic, and a New York concern hopes to popularize the food in this country.

With as much as 80,000 pounds of meat sometimes cut from a single animal, even the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is impressed. It has issued a recipe—mark the day, Nantucket and New Bedford—for a four-helping dinner of roast whale.

Flammable Homes

Deploring the flammable construction of summer homes, fire safety experts advise equipping such homes with basic fire fighting equipment, including water type fire extinguishers and several galvanized steel pails. Pails may be filled with sand or water, it is pointed out, and are needed by bucket brigades to quell fires in their early stages.

Poly, Want A Cracker?

Alkyd resins are much used in priming coats, enamels and water emulsion paints. They give a high gloss, good adhesion and good resistance to weathering. In case you don't know it, alkyd resin is the product of modified reaction of polybasic acids with polyhydroxy alcohols.

Scattered City

A mythical community is the sixth largest city in the U.S.A. Trailer Coach Manufacturers Association survey reveals that today about 1,500,000 people in the U.S. live in mobile homes giving "Trailer City" a population which ranks it just below Detroit with 1,837,000.

Margarined bread crumbs make an excellent topping for casserole dishes. To make the topping, melt two tablespoons of margarine in a frying pan. Turn into the pan one cup of finely ground bread crumbs and stir constantly over a low fire until they are thoroughly mixed.

Flies Dangerous

Flies are disease carriers which depend on trash heaps for nourishment, so wipe out flies and the germs they carry by keeping all refuse in galvanized steel garbage cans. Health officials recommend the cans because they have close-fitting covers to keep out flies.

Protect Feeds

Small amounts of animal feed are protected from rodents by using galvanized steel grain storage cans. These cans are of all metal construction and have close-fitting covers to keep out predatory animals.

Blue-painted walls are cool and restful. They make an excellent background for a light room that will be decorated with a certain amount of formality.

Banks Report Increased Farm Loans; Reds Ask Peace Talks Be Resumed

FARM REPORT—A recent survey of rural bankers in the home towns scattered across the great midwest farm belt presents a new and somewhat startling picture of farm economy in the nation. Briefly, the survey indicates that farmers are borrowing more money this year, for that matter, than in several years, to make ends meet from day to day.

Reports a Kentland, Ind., banker: Operational loan demands are terrific. Three years ago farmers of the area purchased machinery with cash and had a surplus for operational expenses. Today 65 to 75 per cent of machinery sales are on credit arrangements.

A South Dakota banker presents this picture: For the first eight months of 1951 bank loans have increased 25 per cent over last year.

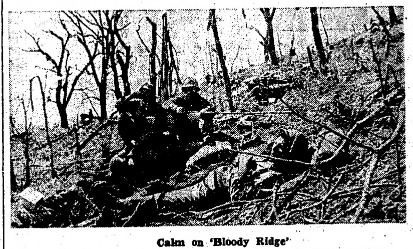
Says an Iowa banker: Loans are up 15 per cent over last year. Capital is tied up in machinery and livestock.

Says a Dover, Minn., banker: About 90 per cent of the farm machinery sales in this area are on credit. Loans have increased 10 per cent.

These conditions, midwest bankers report, are caused by the continued decline of farm prices, nearly 7 per cent since they reached a record high last February. In addition, farm operating costs have continued to increase.

As examples, fertilizer, which was selling at $44 a ton F.O.B. Chicago last fall, now sells for $64 a ton. In Minnesota farm hands are drawing $15 a day without board, comparing to $10 a year ago. Iowa farmers who paid $11.75 a 100 for binding twine last year must now pay $16.75. These examples indicate, midwest bankers say, that overall farm costs are up approximately 15 per cent over last year and 2 per cent over February when farm prices began their decline.

The only solution, according to the U.S. department of agriculture, is to keep farm prices at a high level. To accomplish this the department is expected to start a campaign this fall urging farmers to withhold crops from market. At present only six of 30 major commodities are bringing the parity price declared by law to be equally fair to growers and those who buy their products.



Calm on 'Bloody Ridge'

GI's relax among blackened stumps of trees on the devastated slope that is known as "bloody ridge" on the east central front of Korea. This ridge was taken from the Communists after some of the hardest fighting in the Korean campaign.

MONTH OF DECISION—It may very well be that future generations of American school children will study the month of September, 1951, in their history books as the month of decision—the month during which the free world consolidated its position against communism.

For during the month four significant things happened:

(1) Forty-nine nations met in San Francisco and signed the Japanese peace treaty which put that nation firmly on the side of freedom.

(2) The ministers of France, Great Britain and the United States met in Washington and decided upon a contract with West Germany that amounts to a treaty ad which will greatly increase West Germany's contribution to the defense of free Europe.

(3) Meeting in Ottawa, Canada, twelve Atlantic Pact countries debated and solved many military and economic problems related to their common defense.

(4) In Washington Italian and United States representatives discussed important revision in the Italian peace treaty, especially clauses relating to Italy's armed forces limitations.

All this activity adds up to strengthening of the free world's defenses against Communist aggression and thus, in turn, the very home towns of this country.

THE HALF WAR—One American soldier, who can be said to represent the average small town youth who makes up the United States army, said recently when informed that the Communists have unexpectedly asked for renewal of peace talks at Kaesong:

"Let's get this thing decided upon one way or another. "We've been half fighting and half not fighting for months now."

This attitude is typical of most American soldiers in Korea today. Foreign correspondents report the men want a definite yes-or-no answer to whether there will be peace or not. If it is to be a fight they want to get at it and gain a clear cut decision.

This attitude is becoming more and more apparent in the small towns of the nation, too. This business of talking while men fight on a limited scale is not the American way. If there is to be peace, the American reasons, let's have it without a lot of beating around the bush. If it is to be war, let it be all-out-war.

POSTAL RATES—The house-senate conference committee will report within a few days upon bills passed by the house and senate to increase rates on postcards, newspapers, magazines and some other types of mail and services.

Although the senate and house versions of the bill are different in some detail, the two bills are similar in that they would raise rates on second-class mail, which includes newspapers, magazines and other periodicals by 30 per cent over a three year period in stages of 10 per cent a year.

The bills are also in agreement on postal card rate increase from 1 cent to 2 cents.

The final version of the bill is expected to produce somewhere in the neighborhood of $126,000,000 of additional annual postal revenues.

POLITICAL SCENE—Following his visit to North Dakota, Sen. Robert Taft returned to his home in Cincinnati where he told reporters: "If I got the same reception in a few more states, I think I'd decide to run (for president)."

And while the senator was making this statement, reports from Europe continued to circulate that Gen. Dwight Eisenhower was definitely interested in becoming a candidate, but only on the Republican ticket. The general, observers reported, would reject the Democratic bid because he did not want to be hampered by hanger-ons.

As for Senator Taft, observers said Eisenhower would try to beat him out because he felt the Ohio solon's isolation reputation would ruin this country's defense program and battle against communism.

PAY INCREASE—The house passed a series of bills increasing the pay of more than 1,500,000 government employes by a total of $670,045,600 a year. The bill will be reported soon from senate-house conference where differences will be ironed out between it and a senate version previously passed.

The house version provides: (1) A flat $400 pay increase for 1,043,614 government workers—totaling $417,445,600; (2) increases of $400 to $700 a year for 500,000 postal workers—totaling $235,760,000 annually; (2) an $800 limit on increases for 42,000 postmasters and 26,000 postal supervisors—totaling $19,690,000 annually.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION

50,000 Annual Plane Output Possible

Manly Fleischmann, defense production administrator, reports the nation will soon have the capacity to pour out 30,000 tanks and 50,000 planes a year—plus strategic stockpiles "to carry us through a year of total war."

In a speech at the 70th American Federation of Labor convention in San Francisco, he said stockpiles of strategic materials needed to carry through a year of all-out conflict would be available even though the United States is cut off temporarily from all foreign sources.

He also pointed out that steel capacity will be up 18,000 tons over the output before the Korean war and there now is a 90 per cent increase in primary aluminum capacity, with proportionate increases in electric power.

Preventing Burns

The handles of pots and pans should always be so arranged that they will not jut out from the edge of the kitchen range. Many severe burns have been caused by carelessly catching such a handle in pocket or sleeve.

Upstairs Screens

Upstairs screens should be securely fastened to prevent small children from falling out of open windows.

Use peanut butter bait to trap mice. It makes a better mouse catcher than cheese and other baits. If peanut butter is soft, work it into a bit of cotton before placing it on the trap.

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD

● Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!

Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon . . . right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, worn-out feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

HOMER CROY'S Jesse James WAS MY NEIGHBOR

THE STORY SO FAR: Frank establishes an anti-Union reputation for the James family. A squad of Union soldiers enters the James yard one day, hangs Dr. Samuels and lashes Jesse with a rope. Mrs. Samuels manages to cut her husband down, saving his life, but the event makes a profound impression on young Jesse. As a result the boy joins Quantrill's band. After Appomattox, Jesse and other members of the band are riding to Lexington, Missouri, to surrender when they are attacked by Union soldiers. Jesse is seriously wounded and goes home to convalesce. During this period he meets his cousin, Zerelda Mimms, later to become his wife.

CHAPTER III

One of the disturbing factors of the period and the place was the 'loyalty oath' which the government made the residents of this section take. No one was permitted to practice law, teach, or preach unless he had first taken what was called the 'Iron-clad Oath.' Ministers, or preachers, who had even given a meal or a night's lodging to a Confederate could be thrown in jail. In Liberty there was so much resentment against the North that the Confederate flag continued to fly over the courthouse; indeed, it was not pulled down until almost 1870.

The feeling of hatred was never stronger. Francis P. Blair, who saved Missouri to the Union, was running for Congress. His life was openly threatened. In 1866 he was to make a speech at Louisiana, Mo. When he was ready to speak, he walked to a table on the platform, took out two pistols, put them on the table, then said: "I understand that I am to be killed here today. I have just come from four years of killing and am familiar with that kind of business. Let the man who tries to kill me take good aim." Then he launched into his speech; there were no interruptions. Once, however, in St. Louis, a man in the audience suddenly rose up, and from a distance of twenty feet fired at Blair, missing. Immediately the man was seized. Blair said, "Let him shoot. If I am wrong I ought to be shot," then went ahead with his speech.

Band of Men Rob Bank in Liberty

This was the sort of thing that colored Missouri life in that day, especially in the county where the James family lived. On top of it, times were hard. Banks were unregulated; they ground the people down, and the people hated them, and blamed them for the times. The men who had ridden with Quantrill and his lieutenants didn't mind the idea of something happening to the smug bankers. These men needed money, and they began to think about how to get it.

The geography of the country was admirably suited to outlawry. There were few fences; not many bridges. Armed men on horseback could cut across the country in almost any direction they wished; they were not nozzled down at bridges where officers could pounce on them. An outlaw could ride a few miles and completely disappear; if he rode fifty, it was as if he were in a new country. People knew nothing about him and very kindly asked no questions.

The result was almost inevitable. On February 13, 1866, ten men rode up to the bank in Liberty, Missouri, and the first bank robbery in America took place. So closely upon the end of the Civil War did it follow that when the ex-guerrillas rode down the street, they gave the famous, terrifying rebel yell.

The robbers went inside, and then made its appearance an article that was to become famous, the grain sack. The men swept up the money from the counter, and into the grain bag it went: $62,000. A posse was raised which got nowhere impressively. After a time it came back, saying it had 'pressed them hard.' And that was the end of that.

Frank James was in the robbery. After the affair cooled down he came home, and he must have told Jesse about what had happened and must have shown Jesse the money. And Jesse—who had been thinking about being a farmer, about joining the church—must have looked at it and had other thoughts. It must not have seemed so terribly wrong to rob a bank. Hadn't he seen far worse at Centralia? Hadn't he seen more than a hundred men die in cold blood in one day? And hadn't he killed one of them, himself?

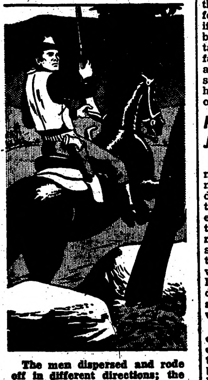
He was eighteen and a half years old.

There was talk that the Jameses, somehow, had been mixed up in the Liberty robbery. They were rough and tough and carried guns wherever they went. But so did the other young men in the neighborhood. And Jesse was going regularly to church and was singing whenever he had the slightest opportunity. Frank was definitely suspected, but nothing was done about it. Proof was conspicuously lacking; everywhere Frank and Jesse had friends. The two did not know it at the time, but these friends were to become tremendously important assets, for they were to hide Frank and Jesse when the law was on their heels. In a short time the robbery blew over.

Jesse had begun to get better; he carried scars now, not open wounds. He had become his old self. He joked and he was full of fun. And he was in love. But there were greater forces working upon him—the aftermath of the war, the poverty of his family, . . . and the easy way Frank had made some money.

The James Family was poor; they did not have enough horses—work stock—to take care of the crops. But what they did have was riding stock, light, fast horses for getting about on the roads. And now, for the first time in his life, Jesse got upon a horse and rode away to rob. He headed for Lexington, the town where he had stopped the bullets. The date was October 30, 1866 . . . about eight months after the easy pickings at Liberty.

Five mounted men rode into Lexington at the noon hour. This did not arouse any special attention, for they did not come together, but one by one and from different directions. Mounted men were constantly arriving in small towns, for the railroads were few and far between; horseback was the way men traveled.



The men dispersed and rode off in different directions; the posse would be looking for a band. But no one had seen a band.

The five strangers tied their horses to the hitchracks and casually sauntered across the street. One of the men detached himself from the others and went in the bank. He put down a $50 United States bond, at this time bonds being used as money.

The 'Bank Examiners' Make Another Big Haul

"Can you change this?"

"I reckon I can," said the cashier agreeably. That was the way to make a friend for the bank.

He opened the cash drawers and began to get the money. As he did so, two other men sauntered in, but once inside they became extremely businesslike. The cashier looked up to find himself gazing down the barrels of three pistols. Instantly he became less sleepy.

"Who are you?" he demanded.

"Bank examiners," came the answer. (That could have been only one man.)

One of the others produced a grain sack . . . just like the one that had done so well at Liberty.

"Put everything you've got in there," said the examiner.

The cashier put it in.

The three men began to back toward the door, their pistols pointed at the still-befuddled cashier.

"If you poke your head out inside of ten minutes, we'll shoot it off."

In a few minutes it was all over and the bank examiners were galloping down the street. The cashier did come out finally. The bewildered citizens did not know what to do; it was an hour before some of them could get on horses and start after the five unceremonious strangers. And they didn't go any too fast. They followed the trail for two days —not any too ardently—then returned and said they guessed the robbers had got away.

Not far from the James farm was Savannah, Missouri, a prosperous pioneer town, with money in the bank. At exactly noon—as had happened at Lexington—five men rode into town. The date: March 2, 1867.

Four of the men sauntered into the bank, leaving one on the street to hold the horses. The banker sized things up, leaped to the safe and slammed the door. That took a good deal of nerve, but he had it. Then —still on the initiative—he seized a pistol from under the cash counter and began to fire. It was extremely heroic, but it was extremely bad judgment. In a moment he was shot down.

His son rushed out and shrieked, "Robbers! The bank is being robbed!" The man who had been left to guard the horses began to shoot at him, but the horses plunged and he missed.

A posse was formed and galloped grimly after them. Two days later they came slowly back. The robbers had escaped in thin air. One reason they could escape so easily were the back roads and dim trails. The men dispersed and rode off in different directions; the posse would be looking for a band. But no one had seen a band.

Again there was talk about the James Boys, but there was no proof and nothing was done about it. Two men were arrested, but both were freed.

The Savannah raid had a sobering influence on Jesse; there were two sides to his raiding business, it appeared. He returned to farming and to attendance at church. He was feeling strong and sturdy now, except for the fainting spells on hot days which were to be the lifelong after-effect of his wounds. He attended some neighborhood parties, and was remarked to be the most spirited boy there.

But the older men in the gang felt that at Savannah they had been defeated only by bad luck, and that if they tried again they could do better. Jesse allowed himself to be talked into agreeing, and in this the fatal weakness in his character again showed up. If he had had the strength to reject their persuasion he might have gone no further with outlawing.

Richmond Raid Nets Jesse's Bandits $4,000

The older men decided on Richmond, Missouri, a town about fifteen miles from Jesse's home. They also decided to do the job in the big way that had been so successful at Liberty. A little over two months after the Savannah fiasco, fourteen men rode down Richmond's main street, shooting right and left and giving the blood-chilling rebel yell. It worked; it scared the living daylights out of the people. The robbers dashed into the bank with the grain sack, and when they came out they were $400 to the good.

But everything did not proceed entirely right, for at this point the citizens went into action and began taking potshots at the mounted bandits. The outlaws answered and killed three men, there on the streets in Richmond. Then they rode away as fast as they could. A posse was formed and went clattering after them, but as usual accomplished nothing.

The robbery must have made Jesse think some more. Three men killed on the streets. The country outraged. More and more suspicion directed at the James Boys. But still nothing had been proved. No officer had come with a warrant. And there was their family position. It was so good and the family was so respected in the neighborhood that no one made any foolish moves.

There is a story told about Jesse James by General Jo Shelby, the famous Confederate leader. Jesse was going to Lafayette County to buy horses for his stepfather; on the way he stopped at Jo Shelby's, but Shelby was away. Jesse said he would like to feed his horse and rest awhile, himself. Mrs. Shelby was pleased to have him there and made him feel at home.

She had a colored houseboy named Joe Miller. She sent him to a small town named Aullville, and while he was in town he got into a fight with a white boy of his own age, which was about fifteen. The white boy was named Catron. As the two fought, a crowd collected, most of them taking sides with the white boy.

Joe Miller started home.

The white boy then ran to his own home, got a gun, mounted a horse, and started to follow the colored boy. He began to gain, and as he came closer Joe ran and got behind the gatepost at the Shelby home. Catron fired his shotgun, but none of the shot struck the colored boy. Before he could reload, Joe rushed at him, pulled him from the horse, and began to belabor him. Just then Joe looked up and saw a mob coming down the road from town. Knowing what would happen to him, he rushed in and implored Mrs. Shelby to protect him.

Jesse James said, "I'd be pleased to take care of that for you, ma'am."

He made a quick survey. The mob, to get to the house, would have to cross the Davis Creek bridge nearby. So he hurried out and got to the bridge first. There he drew his two pistols, and when the mob came up he said, "This is as far as you go. Turn around and go back."

The mob debated, studying the man with the cold-blue eyes, with the two pistols in his hand. Finally they thought better of it, and went back down the road in the direction whence they had come.

This story illustrates the dual quality of Jesse Jame's nature.

Frank was never the complicated character Jesse was. When he was asked to go on an 'expedition,' he went and that was all there was to it. He would never have dreamed of getting up in church and praying out loud for Jesse. If Jesse wanted to go to Heaven, he would have to do it on his own. No help from brother.

FIRST AID TO THE AILING HOUSE
BY ROGER C. WHITMAN

Walls Cracked by Earthquake

QUESTION: After a recent earthquake I noticed that the outside plaster of my house was cracked all over on all four sides of the house. What can I use to fill up these cracks?

ANSWER: I suppose you mean "stucco" when you speak of 'plaster." If the stucco had only a few large cracks, they could probably be repaired. Since it is cracked all over, you may need to have it stripped off and new stucco applied. Large cracks should first be widened and deepened, then patched with a cement mortar. The usual mortar mixture for stucco repair is one part Portland cement, either white or gray, and three parts clean, coarse sand, with just enough water to make a workable mixture. Or you can get a ready mixed patching mortar—which is not the same thing as patching plaster. When widening a crack for filling, cut into it so that the groove is wider at the lath than at the surface. Brush out all loose cement, and then soak the edges well with water. Pack with mortar, and just before the patch sets, work the surface into a texture to match that of the stucco. Keep the patches wet for three or four days so that the cement will cure. Sometimes a white stucco wall can be matched with a white cement and light yellow building sand, or white marble dust. For a good even effect, you can coat the whole wall with a dampproof cement paint. Very narrow hair line cracks can be filled by painting the stucco with the cement base paint. Get your materials from a dealer in building or masonry supplies. A stucco repair man would know what would be best to do.

Salad Dressing

A quick salad dressing can be made by blending two tablespoons of tomato paste with six tablespoons of mayonnaise. Season this with grated onion, a dash of chili powder, and a few drops of tabasco sauce. This is very good with meat or fish salads.

Salt and Boiling Water

Did you know that salt will raise the boiling point of water? The next time you are cooking in a double boiler, add some table salt to the water-container section of the boiler. This lessens the time necessary to cook the food in the inner container.

Britain's Atomic Pile

Britain's first small-scale atomic pile at Harwell is producing a small amount of heat. A select team of scientists at this station has manufactured its first sample of plutonium. A new 2,000 acre "atom factory" at Sellafield will manufacture plutonium on a large scale, produce electric power from uranium and pump it into Britain's unique grid system of electricity.

Central American Attractions

In the mountainous regions of Central America the dominating features are vast green depths and towering purple heights, the greatest of which is Tajumulco, in Guatemala, an active volcano nearly 14,000 feet high. Several of the countries have extensive fresh water lake systems. In Guatemala, more than a score of Indian tribes already draw many visitors to their annual festivals.

Prize Livestock

Livestock owners bringing their animals home after competition in state and county fairs are advised to keep them apart from home herds for 30 days—just in case they may have picked up a contagious disease that is slow in showing up. The American Veterinary Medical association says there is always a chance that show stock may be exposed to infection in transit or while on the fair grounds, yet it may take three weeks before signs of illness become apparent. In the meantime, quarantining them protects the home herd from exposure.

Stop "Extension Cord Wiring"— Have Your Home Wired RIGHT!

If you find yourself running extension cords to all parts of the house from a few outlets, your wiring is outmoded. It's time you should have it checked and brought up to date.

At the time you wired your farm and home for rural electricity, your wiring was probably adequate. You had enough wiring to carry as much electricity as you would need at any one time in your home. You had enough circuits, large enough to handle all the appliances you had or were planning, and you had a sufficient number of outlets.

That was when you first wired. Today the story is different. You have found many new uses for your dependable rural electric power. You have added a freezer, a range, extra lights and radios—in short, your electric load is much greater than it was three, four or five years ago. Today you must rework your wiring system to save you the inconvenience and danger of using "extension cord wiring."

Outside your farm home, too, your wiring may need some overhauling. Excessive line sagging should be corrected and wires should not be permitted to rub against other objects or come close to other wiring. Lines should be large enough to carry proper voltage and insulators and supports should be kept firm and tight.

Five principal reasons for farmer's electrical troubles are: (1) Overloaded circuits (2) Improper fuse protection (3) Open circuits — indicating blown fuses, burned-out appliances, broken wires or open switches. (4) Partial short-circuits caused by damaged or poor insulation, or by accidental grounding. (5) Faulty ground connections, usually caused by a broken ground wire, grounding to shallow water pipe or to poorly installed ground rods.

Have your wiring examined by a competent electrician. To make sure the wiring plan you work out with your electrical contractor permits all additional load and future extensions likely to be needed, talk over your electric power needs with your cooperative's utilization director. The combined experience of these authorities will help you enjoy the maximum comforts and conveniences of electrical living on your farm.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Our Bank Says "Help Yourself"

People around here need lots of small change these days — what with candy, gum, cigarette and soft drink machines . . . pay phones . . . and those penny sales taxes.

Used to put a strain on our bank. Changing money took up a lot of time. Then the Chief Teller Happy Wilson, read about another bank using a "help yourself" change system. The directors decided to see if it would work here.

They set out some big shallow bowls full of nickels, dimes and pennies with a sign saying "MAKE YOUR OWN CHANGE." Works fine, too. At the end of the day the totals are never more than a couple of cents under—or over— the right amount.

From where I sit, folks everywhere are pretty much alike, although they may seem different. Farmers and city folks, Republicans and Democrats, those who enjoy a glass of beer occasionally and those who prefer something else— we all usually try to live up to the trust others have in us.

HOMER CROY'S
Jesse James
WAS MY NEIGHBOR

THE STORY SO FAR: Jesse recovers from his wound and begins to lead a fairly normal life, attending church and associating with other young people. However, the times and the Missouri geography are suited to outlawry, and on February 13, 1866, 10 men, among them Frank James, rob the Liberty, Missouri, bank of $63,000. Frank shows Jesse his share of this "easy money" and Jesse is intrigued. About eight months later, in October, 1866, Jesse takes part in his first bank robbery—in Lexington, Missouri. Jesse thus is launched on his fabulous career as a bandit; but, complex character that he is, he never misses an opportunity to go to church and pray.

CHAPTER IV

The days of moods and meditations continued for Jesse. God wanted him. Perhaps; but so did his bold friends. He was an expert shot, he was a fine horseman, and he was fearless. He was an addition to any band. And, young as he was, he was beginning to show qualities of leadership. It seemed easier to make a living robbing a bank now and then than it did farming. There is a good deal of evidence—too detailed to go into here—to indicate that Jesse was violently pulled between the requirements of a religious life and the demands of banditry. He became moody; his mother complained that he would no longer 'talk' to her. She had lost his confidence. Once she told her husband, "I don't understand him any more.'

Not far away was another powerful influence. The Youngers. Big, portly Cole Younger also had a great interest in religion (sometimes the others called him 'Bishop'), but he didn't allow it to confuse the issue; the issue with Cole was banditry. He had been in the Richmond raid, although he always said he hadn't been. But then, he was the most sanctimonious liar in three counties.

Cole Younger had ridden with Quantrill in Kentucky and thought he knew all about it. He began to talk up Kentucky as a land overflowing with gold and banknotes, and finally convinced the others this was true.

Cole Younger Scouts The Russellville Job

He said that Russellville, Kentucky, was just waiting to be plucked, so he was sent down to scout it. He used the method that had almost unconsciously, been adopted by the gang. He went to the window and said, "Can you change this $100 note for me?"

The cashier looked Cole over and smelled something.

"I'm a cattle buyer from Louisville," said Cole.

He looked about as much like a cattle buyer as he did like a musk-ox.

"No," said the cashier, "I'm afraid I can't."

The cattle buyer returned his $100 note to his pocket and left.

A week later, on March 20, 1868, Cole led the gang back; among the six was Jesse James.

By a streak of good luck, the gang galloped out of town with $14,000 in the faithful grain sack, and without killing a single man. They didn't even give the inevitable posse a chance not to get too close to them.

But the Russellville bankers were not satisfied with half-hearted pursuit and a hue and cry that quickly died down. They wired to Louisville and engaged a detective to get on the trail—D. T. Bligh. He began to work with an assistant, William Gallagher, and they soon discovered that Jesse James was suspected but that nothing had been done about it. Bligh and his man decided to do something. And now, for the first time, Jesse had detectives to deal with.

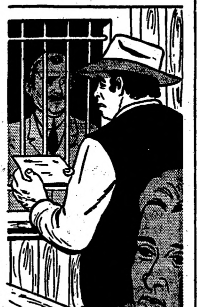
Jesse was accustomed to outdistancing posses. He didn't know about the kind that came in the silence of the night and listened at keyholes. But some way or other he found out that they were on his trail, and he realized that he had to do something and do it fast. He had plenty of money, so he did a surprising thing. He went to New York, saw the sights, got on a boat and went to Panama. He crossed the Isthmus, got on a steamship, landed in San Francisco, then, his trail well confused, he headed for Paso Robles, California, the place where he had intended to go all the time.

Paso Robles was thirty miles south of San Luis Obispo, and the reason Jesse went there was his uncle, Drury Woodson James, the one whom he was named after. 'Mr. D. W.,' as he was called, had been one of the founders of the present incorporated city of Paso Robles, at that time called El Paso de Robles. In 1860, with John D. Thompson, he had bought 10,000 acres of government land on La Panza Rancho and stocked it with 2500 head of cattle. D. W. realized the value of the mineral springs. He and Thompson built a wooden hotel and cottages, and the place soon became famous for its hot sulphur springs and mud baths. On September 15, 1866, D. W. James had married, and now, to visit his uncle and pay his respects to his new aunt, came Jesse James.

Just a little over a year after Jesse had returned from California seemingly finished with 'road work' and persuaded to life on the farm, he mounted his horse and, together with Frank and Cole Younger, rode off toward Gallatin, Missouri, about forty miles from the James farm. They appeared in the town on December 7, 1869. Cole and Jesse went in, leaving Frank outside to hold the horses. Cole used his old dodge—could the cashier change a $100 bill? The cashier said he could and started to count out the change. As he was doing so, Cole drew his pistol and said, "Don't make a move or I will kill you."

Out came the grain sack and Jesse began to toss in all the money he could see, which, goodness knows, wasn't much—$700.

Two or three persons had started to enter the bank, but Frank warned them off. Suddenly the people realized what was happening and scurried away after their guns. Frank yelled to Cole and Jesse to hurry.



The cashier looked Cole over. "I'm a cattle buyer from Louisville," said Cole.

A characteristic of Jesse's was his loyalty to friends. Now, as he was filling the sack, his attention was suddenly caught. Where had he seen that cashier before? Stepping over to Cole, he talked in a low undertone, both of them looking intently at the cashier. And then suddenly Jesse shot him. The cashier fell dead in as cold and cruel a murder as Jesse over committed.

A Cold-Blooded Act: Jesse Shoots Cashier

By this time Frank was popping away right and left. The other two rushed out, but in attempting to mount Jesse was thrown. He was in a pickle. He had no horse and the citizens were beginning to come up with their hardware. The tricky situation was solved by Frank, who pulled Jesse up behind him and out of town they galloped, Jesse clinging to the sack.

Luck was with them. In fact, luck was with Jesse all his life, until the last. The two met a man on a horse. In no time at all Jesse had a horse and an honest farmer had none.

As they approached the next town they met another man and made him pilot them safely around it. Something was on Jesse's mind; finally he said: "We were just up to the Gallatin bank. I killed a man there. I think he was S. P. Cox. He killed Bill Anderson and I always said I'd get the man if I could."

The Anderson he referred to was Bloody Bill. But Jesse hadn't killed S. P. Cox; he had killed Captain John W. Sheets, a local man.

A posse rode out to no avail. But somethig else happened. The riderless horse was caught and was identified as belonging to Jesse James. The local talk about the 'tough James Boys' boiled up again with a vengeance, and became more than just talk, for the Gallatin men went to Captain Thomason, the sheriff of Clay County, gave their proof, and asked the sheriff to 'bring 'em in.'

The sheriff knew Jesse's and Frank's courage and their ability to take care of themselves, and didn't hanker after the job. But he had to do it. So he swore in three deputies and rode over to get the Boys. They turned in from the main highway and advanced toward the house. Frank and Jesse saw them coming, but instead of trying to get out the back side of the farm, they rode out to meet them. This was more than the deputies were counting on.

"You boys've got to go to town with us," called Captain Thomason.

"We don't want to go to town with you," said Jesse with complete logic.

The four deputies glanced at one another, then one said, "You boys think it over."

"We've thought it over," said the Boys.

"I'll count ten," announced the sheriff.

"You can count all you want to, but it won't do you any good. We don't figger to change our minds."

Frank glanced at his brother. Jesse's pistol flashed out, and, taking careful aim, he shot the horse the sheriff was on. The animal reeled to the ground, Thomason managing to keep from being entangled with it.

Whirling, Frank and Jesse dashed away. The deputies fired a few shots, hitting nothing but the wind.

The humilating part came when the sheriff had to go to the house and get Mrs. James's permission to borrow a horse. She gave him her permission and something he hadn't asked for—a piece of her mind. She was very liberal with this; it steamed a little around the edges.

Jesse was now definitely on the 'dodge,' as his mother phrased it. He returned to the James farm; all his life he was returning, and all his life he was having to scurry away. There was no reward on his head, but he was wanted. And yet, so strange a person was he, he was getting quite a bit of fun out of living. He was courting Zee Mimms, he was living better than the average young man of his day. He wore good clothes and kept himself neat and clean. He never looked like a suspicious character. He did like to play pool, but did not drink or gamble—that is, outside of a friendly poker game.

Political Meet Turns Attention From Gang

Now the story moves along to June 3, 1871, and to the town of Corydon, Iowa, about two jumps above the Missouri-Iowa line. The place was agog with excitement—not because seven strangers had ridden in on horseback, but because an outdoor political meeting was being held on the edge of town. The subject up for debate was the location of a schoolhouse, and neighbor was ready to shoot neighbor, as so often happens in a small town.

The reason Jesse had fixed on Corydon was that he knew the taxes had just been collected and the banks were bursting. Going in to one establishment, he hauled out the usual $100 bill and required some change. But the teller explained that the bank's treasurer was at the meeting, and only he had the combination to the safe; so no change. But the teller aimed to be accommodating. He informed the stranger that a new bank had opened just that day, across the town square, and that in view of the fact that it had one-half of its capital on deposit, it might quite likely be able to take care of the $100 bill.

Jesse went out and consulted with his men. Never was there a harder decision. Then over to the new bank he walked, and laid down the bill. The cashier went to the safe to get the money; when he returned he was gazing down into the machinery of a six-shooter. He was promptly taken into the back room and tied up. Jesse and his much-encouraged gang started to fill the sack, but as they were going about their business in walked a Negro preacher to make a deposit. The men received his contribution gratefully, and invited him to join the cashier.

Shortly the inspection was over. The gang mounted their horses and started down the streets of Corydon in a state of pleasurable accomplishment. Soon they reached the spot where the meeting was being held. They rode up as close as the speaker's platform as they could, and then one of them—it was Jesse, of course—called out, "Excuse me for interrupting, but may I ask a question?"

The speaker gazed at him sourly. "Well, what is it?" he asked, none too pleasantly.

"Did you know there's something wrong at the bank?"

The speaker thought Jesse had said there was something wrong with banking, and for a moment the two had to shout back and forth.

"I mean your new bank," said Jesse, and rode away.

It had seemed a curious interruption, and nothing was thought of it right away. Then somebody from the audience figured it might be a good idea to look anyhow. It turned out to be an exceedingly good idea, for, threshing around in the back room, they found the cashier and the minister.

Interest in the speaking immediately fell off. The farmers unhitched their work mares, straddled them, and went clipping down the road after the riders who had the finest and fastest horseflesh in the State of Missouri. The usual happened. They came drooping back after a while, without even having caught sight of the callers from out of state. The next time they had a political speaking in the town, 'tis said a great many of the men sat facing the bank.

A good day's work. Seven men had taken in $40,000.

Robert A. Pinkerton himself took charge of running down the Boys.

A Tree Should Be Kept Within Bounds Always

Shade trees require trimming in the summer when they grow out of bounds.

Dense foliage of street trees create hazards by hiding traffic lights and obstructing views. Lush growth of lawn trees darkens the interiors of houses. A low hanging branch, bowed under the weight of leaves, restricts passage over doorways and can become annoying to pedestrians on sidewalks.

Corrective pruning will eliminate these faults.

There are few trees that cannot be improved, in beauty and health, by judicious pruning. Raising limbs by eliminating lower branches will prevent sidewalk obstructions. It also lets in more light to the turf beneath, which is highly desirable under lawn trees.

SPORTSMAN'S HORIZON

By JIM RHODY

Better Shells

Paper in today's shotgun shells can withstand far more abuse than those of a decade ago thanks to a World War II discovery revealed today by Western-Winchester officials.

A plastic compound, melamine formaldehyde, added to pulp in the manufacturing process results in a paper that withstands dampness and friction when shells are carried on scores of trips during bad weather in the pocket of a sportsman's coat.

High wet-strength paper originally was used in 40,000,000 wartime maps and as a packaging material. It was developed to meet military demands for a paper retaining maximum strength when wet.

Affected Fitting

Before this plastic treated paper entered the sporting ammunition picture, scuffing and dampness sometimes prevented a shell from fitting into the chamber of a gun.

The abrasion test: After 30 turns on the abrazer, the paper disc is removed.

A mechanical "hunter's pocket" was devised by Western-Winchester ballisticians to determine the value of high wet-strength paper in shotshells over previously used shell cases. Both new and old shells were subjected during the experiments to friction and dampness many times more severe than they would receive over a long period of time when carried loose by a hunter.

After they had been soaked in warm water for half an hour, both types of shells were given a 15-minute drubbing in the machine. No perceptible damage resulted to shells made with high wet-strength paper. The older types were scuffed so severely that chambering was difficult and often impossible.

Used Emery Wheel

Another test made by researchers for the sporting arms and ammunition concern involved holding ordinary shotshell paper and high wet-strength paper to a slowly revolving emery wheel. Where the latter type barely was scratched, the other paper virtually burst apart after 20 revolutions.

Search for a "perfect" paper has been a major project of sporting ammunition manufacturers since the advent of paper shotshells half a century ago. Excellent results under normal conditions came when hulls were made of four layers of four-ply paper impregnated with paraffin. Because excessive wear and wet weather frequently damaged such hulls beyond use, research efforts continued.

Comparison: A comparison of the two papers after 30 turns on the abrazer shows the surface of the old-type paper (left) has been completely worn away, exposing the white sub-layer. The High Wet Strength paper (right) shows only a small amount of surface wear.

Wartime developments of high wet-strength paper were viewed as the possible answer to the problem. Sample maps of this paper did not show "noticeable effects" when they were soaked in water wrung out, smeared with grease, daubed with paint, gasoline and mud, walked over by an entire regiment and, finally, rolled over by a tank.

When this paper was made available for civilian use, Western-Winchester began its tests of the paper for shotshell purposes. These led to adoption of high wet-strength paper in making a tougher, more waterproof hull.

There are two schools of thought among bass fishermen about whether noise or sight of an angler will frighten off this species. One school says that Mr. Bass is so game, so pugnacious, that he isn't afraid of anything, particularly noise or the most formidable appearing angler in the land. The other school maintains that quiet stalking of Mr. Bass is as important as it is when attempting to creel Mr. Trout. We suggest the quiet method.

White Painted Walls Turned Yellow

QUESTION: What can be done to keep walls that are going to be painted white, from turning yellow? My white painted walls have always turned yellow or have discolored. Would putting bluing (laundry blue) or else some blue paint in with the white paint prevent this discoloration? How much should I use in each gallon of paint?

ANSWER: A good grade of paint should not turn yellow or discolor. I believe you bought an inexpensive grade. I would not advise using laundry blue. If you wish to add a small amount of blue paint to the white, it should be perfectly all right, and might help to give a good white effect. But do not attempt to mix the paint yourself. Ask your paint dealer to mix it for you in his mechanical mixer. If you try it yourself, add very small quantities of color in oil and thoroughly stir each amount, until you get the desired shade.

Otter Tales

By . . . Reddy Kilowatt

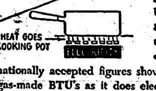
I been reading some ads lately where some folks are trying to prove that bottle gas is cheaper than electricity for cooking, water heating and refrigeration. Now, I should get mad about this, but I won't, because I think most of these ads are put out by people who didn't take time to get all the figures.

In the first place, nobody should compare gas and electricity unless they also mention those funny little fellows called BTU's. Heat is measured by BTU's all over the world (BTU actually stands for British Thermal Unit, if you remember your 8th grade physics) just like temperature is measured in degrees and time in minutes.



Now, nationally accepted figures show that it takes over TWICE as many gas-made BTU's as it does electrically-made BTU's to cook a meal. For water heating, it takes more than three times as many gas-made BTU's as it does electrically-made BTU's. You can see from the illustration why: A lot of the BTU's from gas are wasted.

Well, you say, that sounds logical on paper — how does it work out in the kitchen? In the kitchen, it's PROVEN! Recently a month-long comparison was made, using identical meals from menus supplied by the Bureau of Home Economics, U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Nationally known electric and gas ranges were used. The electric range used nearly 141 kilowatt hours of electricity during the month (480,832 BTU's) . . . and the LP gas range used almost 63 pounds of gas (1,359,720 BTU's). Even under these most carefully controlled conditions, the gas range took 2¾ BTU for every electrically-made BTU!

The important thing to remember, when anybody talks about cooking with gas, is that your bill at the end of the month — whether it's your electric bill or your bill for bottled gas — is dependent upon how many BTU's it took to do the cooking.

To get back to the test, from a dollars and cents standpoint, the 140 kilowatt hours used by the electric range would cost the average electric user in the Otter Tail system about $3.52. But the 63 pounds of gas used by the gas range, at the rate of 7½c per pound, would cost $4.72!

And, of course, as everybody knows (in addition to being CHEAPER) electric cooking is cooler, cleaner, safer, faster and more efficient. Don't be fooled! Little old Reddy — that's me — is the BEST helper you've got in your home!

Early Days of Rice

Believed to have originated in the East Indies, rice became the staple food of the whole Orient, and it was not until the Middle Ages that it came to Europe. Alexander the Great reported rice growing in Babylonia during one of his expeditions of conquest about 400 B. C.

Dangers of Kerosene

One common and dangerous practice is the use of kerosene to speed up a slow fire. Kerosene vaporizes when poured into a warm stove, and this vapor may explode, igniting clothing and furniture in the room.

Field of Paradox

For the modern prospector, uranium—once a nuisance in obtaining other minerals—has opened up a paradoxical field. It is rare and not rare, surrounded by secrecy on one hand and highly publicized on the other. It is a potential benefactor and deadly enemy.

Life Expectancy Up

The expectation of life at birth among American wage earners and their families rose to an all-time high of 68.2 years in 1950. This is a half year higher than in 1949. The expectation of life has increased 21½ years in the past four decades and has doubled in little more than two generations.

Pin Pads Helpful

For efficiency when sewing, keep a saucer, box, or fat cushion of plain pins on the sewing table. Most dressmakers attach a pin-cushion to their wrist or fasten it on a ribbon around the neck. Even the sewing machine should have a pad of pins fastened to it.

Iron Store Increasing

America's store of iron ore will be increased by many millions of tons within the next two decades, thanks to a new scientific method of extracting high grade iron ore from magnetic taconite rock and concentrating it in a pellet form, usable in blast furnaces.

Industrial Foot Note

Forty years ago the expectation of life at birth among the industrial policyholders of the Metropolitan Insurance company was about 6½ years less than in the general population of the United State. Today the figures are practically the same for both groups.

HOMER CROY'S
Jesse James
WAS MY NEIGHBOR

THE STORY SO FAR: Shortly after Jesse James, still virtually a boy, has robbed his first bank, he joins up with Cole Younger's bandit gang. They succeed in robbing the bank at Russellville, Kentucky. The Russellville bankers, however, put a detective on the bandits' trail and Jesse suddenly is seized with an urge to travel. He goes to New York, Panama and thence to California. Upon his return to Missouri some months later he lives a quite life for a year. Then he suddenly joins Cole Younger and his brother Frank in robbing the Gallatin, Missouri, bank. After that follows a spectacular raid on the bank at Corydon, Iowa. Robert Pinkerton starts on the gang's trail.

CHAPTER V

Jesse and Frank were questioned, but proved by neighbors and friends that they had been at home during the robbery, hard at work as all honest citizens should be. In the course of their career the Boys were many times kept from arrest by this kind of testimony; sometimes it arose out of fear, but mostly it arose from friendship or from a sharing of the Boys' attitude toward banks and railroads. The incident when Jesse and Frank stayed overnight and Jesse practiced pistol-shooting with young John Carmichael is supposed to have taken place after the Corydon affair, for the Carmichael farm lay on their path back to Clay County.)

The Boys disappeared again. Jesse was now twenty-three years and six months old.

Forty thousand dollars is a great deal of money, even when divided among seven, but money slips away, and Jesse's general principle was to live comfortably when he had it until what he had was about gone; then he would start to stew around how to get more. Frank, on the other hand, was more provident. It didn't slip through his fingers as it did Jesse's. Frank wasn't the harum-scarum Jesse was; nor was he as much fun.

Columbia Affair Goes Badly; Cashier Killed

So now things move along to April 29, 1872, a little less than a year after the public-speaking in Corydon. The place is Columbia, Kentucky. Five men canter down the street; three enter the bank. But the affair doesn't go well. When they come out the cashier is dead and all there is in the grain sack is $1500.

The posse comes back and tells how it almost got them, once.

This robbery did have one serious effect. It made the detectives redouble their efforts. But as yet no arrests were made.

More and more the James Boys were being talked about; their fame was spreading. Yet neither had been arrested and the only one who had ever been inside a jail was Frank and that was during guerrilla days. Was Jesse to go to jail?

Jesse was soon desperate for money again. And at this juncture, most providentially, Kansas City held a fair. Why, this was just at his back door! Suddenly, on the afternoon of September 26, 1872 (six months after the Columbia Call), three masked men swooped down on one of the gates of the fairground and seized the cashbox.

The money was in bills, quite a bit in silver. Arrangements had been made with the First National Bank for the bank to stay open after hours and the money taken to it; the bandits had a different idea. The box was dropped into the faithful sack and the three rode happily away. The amount taken has never been definitely established, but it is believed to have been about $8000.

But this time no posse. The matter was turned over to the police, which promptly ended it.

Jesse was becoming more and more the leader. He was the most daring, he would take chances the others wouldn't. And with leadership came problems to solve. It wasn't all easy pickings. For one thing, there was the matter of organizing his men. This was a problem not because it was difficult to get men, but because most of them were no good. He was discovering that it was extremely difficult to get a group of men who could take all the punishment that was necessary and not be at each other's throats. Rain and storm and snow—they had to meet all these. Men who could be depended on in a pinch were a problem. And loyalty too; that was extremely important. In the early part of his career Jesse was very trusting. But toward the end he trusted hardly anyone. He had learned by bitter experience.

Jesse's gang was not static at all; it was constantly changing. From the time he started until he was no more, he had a total of twenty-eight men in his band. One of them he had to kill.

About this time, something began to make an impression on the now-accepted leader of the James-Younger enterprise: this was the increasing number of train robberies.

Hasty historians have said that the 'James-Youngers,' as they came to be called, committed the first train robbery, but this hardly bears inspection. The first train robbery in the United States occured the same year as the first bank robbery, which was the handiwork of the James-Youngers. The first train robbery was at Seymour, Indiana, and the date was October 6, 1866; the first bank robbery had been in February of that year. The train robbers were the Reno brothers and they did right well by themselves, getting $13,000.

From the time he started he had a total of twenty-eight men in his band. One of them he had to kill.

In all, there had been about twenty train robberies in the United States before the James Boys cocked an eye at it. And when they did, the fate of the Renos didn't worry them even a little bit. One robber never seems to think that because another robber has had his fires slaked that he himself will perish, too. No, he tells himself. He is smarter. He won't make the mistakes the other did. So he hoists up his pants and wades in. Pretty soon his pants are full of lead and his mother weighted down with grief.

James, Youngers, Pick Gold Train as Next Job

By some means the James-Youngers discovered that gold was being shipped out of the West and was coming through Omaha on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific; so they decided to inspect months after the Ste. Genevieve robbery. Two of the men—believed to have been Cole Younger and Frank James—were sent to Omaha to take a short course in gold operations. Jesse, in the meantime, led his stalwarts north into Iowa. They came to the quiet little town of Adair, which had never had anything more exciting than a hair-pulling, and went outside of town a short distance to inspect a railroad track which they thought might be in bad condition.

Breaking into a handcar shed they took a spike-bar and hammer, pried off the fishplate, and pulled out the spikes. Then they tied a rope to the rail in such a manner that the rail could be pulled out of alignment. When everything was set, they hid behind the embankment on a curve where the train always slowed down.

The train came along, the rope was pulled. The men had thought the train would merely stop; instead, the engine balanced for an agonizing moment, then toppled over on its side, instantly killing the engineer. Men, women, and children were tossed about in a dreadful scene. But with the tragedy there was also comic relief.

In the day coaches were thirty Chinese who were being brought to this country to be educated. Their passage money had been put up by a church organization which wanted to take them out of heathen China and show them how Christians lived. Some of the Chinese could talk a little English; all wore their queues and long black skirts.

Suddenly the Chinese were thrown violently about in the day coach. They screamed at the top of their voices, not realizing this was part of the American educational system. Then they came tumbling out of the coach. But by this time the bandits had taken command, and to frighten the Chinese they began to fire in the air. It worked perfectly. The Chinese went screaming back into the coach. As if this wasn't enough, one of the bandits, who had entered one end of the coach, now began to pop his pistol. The Chinese screamed louder than ever, not realizing they were receiving an advanced course.

Meantime other things were happening. The gang entered the express car and forced the guard to open the safe, but all they found was $3000. Frank James and Cole Younger hadn't done such a good job after all, for they had made a mistake; the next night—just twenty-four hours later — $75,000 went over that very spot. It was enough to embitter them in their new work.

The troubles of the Chinese were only beginning. Angry because of the small amount of money in the express car, the bandits started down the aisles of the cars with the familiar grain sack, ordering the passengers to toss in their money and valuables. In a few minutes they reached the coach where the Chinese were, and commanded them to throw in. The Chinese didn't understand this part of the curriculum, either, and only stared at the grain bag. One of the bandits made signs of emptying his pockets, but the Chinese didn't have pockets—only sleeves—and so they merely continued to stare at the collection bag and the strange antics of the Americans. In disgust the bandits left, saying things the Chinese had not learned in the church schools. Getting on their horses, they rode away into the night.

Alarm Is Sounded But Posse Gets No Results

Since it was obvious that it would be hours before the train could be righted, it was decided to walk the passengers to the nearest town, which was Anita, Iowa. After a great deal of shouting and badgering, the passengers were started down the track, following the brakeman with a lantern. As the weird procession got underway, one of the Chinese was heard to say (or so it is reported), "Amelica one helle countree."

An emergency telegraph set had been rigged up and cut in on the regular line. Word was dispatched for a wrecking train; and word was spread of the robbery.

Meantime the robbers were on their way back to Missouri. The train crew tried to arouse the farmers and get them to pursue the bandits. The farmers said they hadn't lost any money and that the railroad men could chase them themselves, being as the farmers bore no particular love for the iron horsemen. The railroad then dispatched word to all agents along the way to organize posses. This was backed up by special trains leaving Council Bluffs with men armed to the teeth; they stopped along the way and picked up rented horses that the local agents had arranged for. Then the railroad men went bouncing and jolting along in what they thought was hot pursuit of the robbers.

The State of Iowa leaped to action and offered the princely reward of $600. The railroad got busy and offered $5000.

After a time the pursuers came dragging back, and it developed that not one had seen a bandit. Some of the farmers mumbled behind their hands that the railroad men hadn't wanted to. As for the James Boys and their companions, they were back in Missouri. Not a single arrest was ever made.

While it is not true that the James - Younger gang were the first American train robbers, they were the first to wreck a train to further a robbery. The date was July 21, 1873. Jesse was twenty five and eight months.

The outlaws didn't know it, but they had now begun to deal with an entirely different group. The banks had done great quantities of nothing; the railroads really meant business. They had been aroused by the previous robberies; now an engineer had been killed. So they not only put up reward money but they also engaged the Pinkerton Detective Agency to kill or capture. And the agency meant to do exactly that.

But the Boys were pretty experienced, and they had had marvelously good luck. Not one of the band had been killed in action. True, three of them had been hanged afterward by fire-snorting citizens, but none had died while engaged in the raids. The Boys were feeling their oats; they must have felt them pretty well, for it was not long before they participated in two robberies inside of two weeks. One was at Hot Springs, Arkansas; the other at Gad's Hill, Missouri. Both went well. The former was a stagecoach robbery, a comedown for men who had been doing bank and train work. The date was January 15, 1874. The grain sack took in about $800, which probably soured the Boys on stagecoachs. The real money was in banks or trains. The Gad's Hill robbery occurred on the last day of that month—January 31, 1874. Better luck this time—$12,000; and no one killed, no one caught.

Posses, of course. For appearances.

Now with Jesse James, at the age of twenty-six, becoming a national synonym for banditry, it seems wise to point out the difference between an outlaw and a 'bad man.' They were two vastly different creatures. Jesse James was never a bad man in the sense that the term is usually used.

SPORTSMAN'S HORIZON
By JIM RHODY

Ceiling Zero?

How high will a rifle shoot? This is a matter about which practically all shooters, at some time or other, have speculated. To boil it down into general terms, with the safety element as a prime consideration, the answer is "A lot farther than you think."

John J. O'Connor, of the physics and ballistics research laboratory of Remington Arms Company, Inc., has reduced the matter to a mathematical formula which reveals the rather surprising information that a bullet fired vertically upward will reach a height equal to more than half the maximum horizontal range of a similar bullet fired at the optimum angle of departure.

Concedes Some Danger

O'Connor says: "Since aviation became popular, there has been a slight but present danger from amateur anti-aircraft men on the ground. In the early days of commercial planes it was all too common for planes flying relatively low over the more remote hills of the eastern United States to be met by bullets. When the German dirigibles were making their regularly scheduled flights to this country, there was at least one incident when a dirigible was hit by a small caliber bullet. These and other accidents probably reflect the lack of knowledge of the impressive height which small caliber bullets can attain. In other words shooters depend upon gravity to make their prank a harmless one. Unfortunately gravity, though highly effective in making a poor range guesser come home with an empty trophy bag, is relatively ineffective in stopping a bullet projected skyward.

No Child's Toy

"For example, consider the 22 long rifle bullet, considered by many, unfortunately, to be a child's toy. As is well known, the high speed version has a maximum horizontal range of about 9/10 of a mile. Not so well known is the fact that if fired vertically upwards, it will attain a height of about 7/10 of a mile or 3700 feet. Even regular or Match velocity 22 long rifle bullets will travel about 3500 feet upward. The force of gravity at the muzzle amounts to only 1.63% of the total force acting. At any velocity above 280 feet per second, the air resistance forces are larger than forces due to gravity.

"Calculations indicate that under any practical conditions the attainable vertical height above gun position is more than half the attainable horizontal range, regardless of bullet or muzzle velocity. When we realize that the maximum horizontal range for center fire rifle bullets may be as much as 6000 yards, we see that it is extremely hazardous to shoot at high angles of elevation without being absolutely certain that not only is there plenty of horizontal distance available, but also there are no aircraft in the vicinity."

"Old Reliable"

In the closing days of the fishing season, the crisp, sunny days of late Fall, the old reliable tandem "guinea-tail" spinner will be found to be one of the most effective of all bass lures. In fact, there are myriad oldtime anglers who assert that if they were to be restricted to just one bass lure, they'd choose the "guinea-tail." The tandem spinner shown here is Pflueger's luminous spinner and is the pioneer of all the "guinea-tail" tandems.

Fewer Fires

Although there were more people seeking recreation in the national forests last year than ever before, the visitors started fewer fires through carelessness than during the previous year, according to the Wildlife Management Institute.

Careless smokers started 1,701 fires on national forests as compared with 1,842 in 1949, records of the U.S. Forest Service show. Incendiary fires, however, increased from 1,204 in 1949 to 1,724 in 1950. The majority of the blazes intentionally set by "fire bugs" occurred on the national forests of the 11 states lying south of Virginia.

Wait Awhile

Although you see your hunting friends getting busy with dogs and arms for the almost-upon-us hunting season, don't you anglers start racking up for the year. There's still a lot of good fishing for crappie in ponds and even the bass, if you have the patience to fish deep water—and it does take patience. Get those lures down, deep, deep, deep and fish 'em slow! That is the technique most likely to produce for the late-season basser.

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD

Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!

Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon ... right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, worn-out feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25c, 50c or only 10c.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Guess They Felt Pretty "Sheepish"

My wife and I went to Central City Saturday for the football game and it was a top-notcher. But I began to wonder if it was worth the trouble when we got in a traffic jam coming home.

Traffic makes me mighty impatient. When I came to a side road that seemed to point towards the main highway, I turned onto it. This road bumps along for maybe a mile, then fetches up short by the railroad—a dead end.

So, I turned around and darned if there weren't twenty cars behind me! One driver had followed—figuring I knew a short cut—then a whole string of them swung after him, like sheep.

From where I sit, there's no sense in just "following along." Whether it's choosing a road, a movie star, or what beverage to drink at meal time, it's always better to make your own decisions. Personally, I often like a glass of beer with my dinner, but most of all, I like the freedom of making up my own mind about it!

Joe Marsh

LEE FLORY, Northern Pacific Yardmaster at Staples, Minnesota, is a sort of traffic cop in plain clothes: his job is keeping countless cars of freight on the move to arrive on time.

He's also a good man to ask about business trends in Minnesota: he knows what's in those cars, who sent them, where they're going. Asked what are Minnesota's most important industries today, he named the railroads and iron mining.

You'll be interested to see what 2,881 other representative Minnesotans said, in a statewide public opinion survey, in answer to this same question.

"What are Minnesota's most important industries today?"

SURVEY FINDINGS:

49% of Minnesota citizens name IRON ORE...
38% say FARMING...others say MILLING

What is an important industry?

Isn't it one that employs many people . . . does essential or useful work . . . and makes real contributions to its community and state?

By such a definition, many Minnesota industries are important . . . important not only to the state as a whole but to every citizen.

Your Mining Stake

Take iron mining. Live where you will—in mining town, metropolis or farm village — you have a personal stake in this industry. Its payroll money ($50 million a year) flows into every Minnesota county. Its purchases of materials, supplies and services ($100 million a year) keep the cash registers of many varied businesses jingling. Its tax payments (over $35 million this year) help support state and local government and your own schools.

Knowing what iron mining means to you today, you might like to know what its prospects are for the future.

A Look Ahead

Some Minnesotans take a dim view of the state's ore future. They point to the shrinking supply of high-grade ore, to greater costs of producing low-grade and taconite ores, to increasing competition from foreign ore fields. Other Minnesotans are more optimistic. They cite the extensive experimental work mining companies are doing to develop leaner ores. They tell you Minnesota can be a leading iron ore producer for generations to come, if only it can make full use of what it has.

And the mining producers themselves — how do they feel about the future? Almost without exception they believe it can be bright indeed—provided only that Minnesota treats the industry in the same fair way it treats other industries.

These producers have demonstrated their desire to stay in Minnesota—to continue and expand operations—by developing the large reserves of low grade ores and taconites. They have over fifty plants now manufacturing iron ore from low grade ores which are not usable as they occur in the ground. They have invested heavily in research and experimental work on still lower grade ore materials and on taconites. With cooperation and fair treatment from the people of Minnesota, the iron ore companies expect to invest hundreds of millions of dollars in plants and equipment to keep iron mining one of the State's great industries.

Reds Explode Second Atomic Bomb; American Harvest Is Satisfactory

THE RUSSIAN BOMB—The question of what the Russians have been doing about the atomic bomb since the first explosion was announced in September, 1949, was answered last week with a White House announcement that another bomb has been exploded.

A few days later Stalin made the announcement in Russia. It was the first time the Russian people had been given any information concerning that country's atomic bomb progress.

The announcement was received in the home towns of the nation much more calmly than the report of the first explosion. The White House statement which said the new explosion was an atomic bomb, belies Communist propaganda that Russia's atomic energy development is strictly for peaceful purposes and not the manufacture of weapons.

The White House announcement said, in part: "In spite of Soviet pretensions that their atomic energy program is being directed exclusively toward peaceful purposes, this event confirms again that the Soviet Union is continuing to make atomic weapons."

Shortly after the new explosion was announced, a British source said the Russians probably now have a stockpile of 50 atomic bombs. Although the Russians have many able scientists, much of their rapid progress in atomic development is due to secrets learned by such men as Klaus Fuchs and Bruno Pontecorvo.

Warren Austin, (left), chief U.S. delegate to the UN, is greeted by Philip Jessup as he reported to a senate committee to testify in defense of Jessup's nomination as a UN delegate. Austin volunteered to appear in behalf of Jessup, who is accused by Sen. McCarthy of being "a dupe of the Communists."

IDENTIFICATION TAGS—The Federal Civil Defense administration has recommended that every civilian in the United States and its territories wear an identification tag bearing his name and address, blood type, religion, and the name and address of a person to be notified in case of injury or death. The agency recommended the tag be worn permanently on a neckline, bracelet or on a chain around the ankle.

In the event of all-out war or atomic attack, the tag would serve to identify not only the injured or dead, but the mentally ill, persons suffering from shock or amnesia, and small children. It would facilitate medical attention, help to reunite families, and be useful in legal claims of various kinds associated with damage to or destruction of life and property.

The procurement and distribution of such an identification device, and the establishment of rules for wearing it, will be the responsibilities of state civil defense agencies.

THE WHITE HOUSE—Senators, ever conscious of grass roots democracy and its lack of pretentiousness, asked a few pointed questions last week concerning the White House which has been under-going remodeling since December 7, 1949.

The senators were told "there is no royal elegance in the building. It is in keeping with dignity, but there is nothing of elegance in this building that is not equaled in many, many a private home throughout the country. It is dignified and fine, but not too fine."

All this was told behind closed doors to the senate appropriations committee before it recommended spending another $261,000 on the reconstruction of the building. Reconstruction is expected to be complete early next year.

The need for additional funds ($5,500,000 has already been spent) was attributed to increased costs of materials and unexpected delays. The building which had been on the verge of collapse has been reinforced with steel, a basement added, and new quarters made in what was formerly the attic.

AMERICAN HARVEST—Americans will eat well this coming year and, at the same time, will be able to fill its world food commitments, according to the Department of Agriculture's report of the 1951 crop situation.

It has been a trying year due to the Kansas-Missouri flood area and drought damage in a number of other sections. But the 1951 harvest is described as satisfactory.

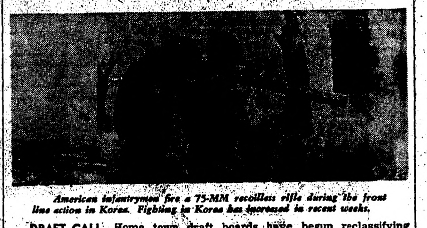
The corn crops will be in excess of 3,000,000,000 bushels. The Agriculture department had asked for 3,500,000,000 bushels. The winter wheat harvest is expected to total 1,000,000,000 bushels, a little less than the department asked, but not dangerously low.

Generally other crops followed the wheat-corn pattern.

NEW TRUCE TALKS—Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway has agreed to the Panmunjom area as a site for new Korean cease-fire talks. The village is located six miles east of Kaesong and 12 road miles northwest of Munsan.

The agreement on a site for the talks does not mean, however, that the talks will actually take place. There remains to be settled a number of technical questions concerning neutrality and policing of the area that could disrupt the best made plans.

Meanwhile, savage battles were being fought in west Korea with the Reds using artillery at a rate unknown to the Communists since the start of the war. But the Allied fall offensive continues to grind out small, hard-won gains at tremendous cost to the enemy.



American infantrymen fire a 75-MM recoilless rifle during the front line action in Korea. Fighting in Korea has increased in recent weeks.

DRAFT CALL—Home town draft boards have begun reclassifying 500,000 married non-fathers. Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, selective service director, said the men would be inducted into the armed forces as rapidly as they can be reclassified and processed, but estimated that fewer than 200,000 of the 500,000 would be reclassified 1-A.

Hershey urged men who have failed to notify their local draft boards that they have become fathers to do so immediately. He also reminded draft eligible men that the selective service law places upon the registrant the responsibility to notify his board of a change of status. Once the order to report for induction has been issued it is too late to reopen the case.

THE SERIES—Americans in every part of the nation last week forgot their worries long enough to listen to the world series. Wherever there was a radio, at home, in the grocery stores, filling station, poolrooms or fire stations, baseball fans listened to the Giants and Yankees battle for the championship. And it was the Yankees, playing ball like the Yankees of old, making 10 double plays during the series, who were crowned champs, taking the final game from the Giants 4-3.

DEFENSE BOND DRIVE

Americans Are Hanging on to Bonds

The Treasury department reported last week that more Americans are hanging on to more defense bonds than ever before. The Treasury said a new peak of $34,566,000,000 in defense bonds outstanding was reached October 1. The previous high was $34,543,000,000 in June, 1950.

The defense bond drive which began September 3 and ends October 27 is proving to be a big success. In addition, fewer bonds were cashed last month than at any time in the past 17 months.

The department reported 6,200,000 Americans are buying bonds through payroll deduction. At present one out of every two families in the nation hold defense bonds of some kind. The ratio is expected to increase.

Water for Batteries

Frost on the freezing compartment of electric refrigerators is a good source of pure water for automobile batteries. It has no chemical impurities, because it is condensed from moisture in the air.

Eiybbitfb !

How You Pronounce It Isn't Important

It's not a real word, anyway -- it's only the quick way of saying: Electricity Is Your Best Buy in the Family Budget!

Here's why. Electricity is the only every-day living expense that keeps going down in price while everything else goes up.

Most homes use more electricity now than they did ten years ago (national figures show a 68% increase in residential use) -- that's why most bills are higher.

But, on a national average, the per unit cost of electricity is DOWN 18% since 1939.

Check over your family budget -- you'll see what a good word Eiybbitfb is!

Your electric company -- a development of free enterprise through private initiative -- is your best source of low-cost electricity.

New Electric Range So Much Cleaner, Says Rural Homemaker

"I can keep the kitchen so neat and so clean with the electric range," says Mrs. Pete Yerbich of Nebish, Minnesota. "That wood and coal and the kerosene was sure messy."

Mrs. Yerbich finds her new electric range more convenient in a number of other ways, too. It's faster, safer, cheaper, cooler, time-saving, dependable and—it's matchless! She has found that her electric range is as fast as fire—without the flame.

But it's the cleanliness she likes most. There is no wood or coal to carry and store, no kerosene to be bought, carried home and filled into the stove. All Mrs. Yerbich does is flick the switch and she has cooking heat in a matter of seconds.

The Yerbich family, which lives just 2 miles north of Nebish, is a member of the Beltrami Electric Cooperative, and has been using electricity for over six years.

"I cook for six every meal," Mrs. Yerbich says, "and I need all the help I can get."

This is just another way rural electric power is making life easier for rural homemakers all over the Upper Midwest. In the farm home, or on farm production jobs, electricity is proving itself the most efficient hired helper a farmer ever had.

Ruth Larson, 18, Laid to Rest on Tuesday Following Services at Holt Church

We all had a very good time at the carnival on Friday night.

The first graders are finishing a workbook this week. Next week they will really read.

We wrote letters to our folks at home to let them know the picture man would be here on Wednesday. It was hard to remember margins and to indent for paragraphs but we did our best.

Many of us have colds so we must remember our wraps when we go out to play.

Room 2

We enjoyed the carnival: Our congratulations go to Kathy Peterson who was crowned queen of the carnival.

The third graders are in the lead lead in our spelling contest. There are apt to be some skinny turkeys by Thanksgiving.

We are weighing and measuring ourselves this week. A visit from our county nurse is expected.

Room 3

Now that Halloween is over we are looking forward to Thanksgiving. We are planning our room decorations around the Thanksgiving theme

On Wednesday we had our pictures taken.

Room 4

We take this opportunity to express appreciation to parents and friends for the splendid cooperation which helped so much to make our carnival a success. We hope you'll all be back to enjoy our Christmas program and treats.

The last event at the main show was the crowning of the King and Queen. Warren Sagstuen and Karen Mertenson lead the procession carrying in the beautiful silver and red crowns after which marched Cheryl Burton, last year's queen, Mark Carlson, Larry Anderson, John Carlson, Harold Larson, Gary Burton, Merle Larson Jan Hunt, Eugene Brassuer, Helaine Wikstrom, Sharon Wegge, Elaine Rodahl, Bonita Horien, Kathleen Peterson Karen Carlson, Lorna Moe and Barbara Augustine, the king and queen candidates. Mr. Fricker spoke in behalf of the Board of Education and presented the King's crown to Larry Anderson of Grade 2. Cheryl Burton presented queen's crown to Kathleen Peterson, of Grade 3, the new queen. Gifts were presented and Mrs. Peterson pinned a corsage on Kathleen's blue formal.

ZANE GREY'S
WAS MY NEIGHBOR

THE STORY SO FAR: Following Jesse's return from California he resumes his career of banditry with complete earnestness. The story moves along to Columbia, Kentucky, in April, 1872. When the boys come out of that town's bank with their loot, the cashier is lying inside dead. In September, 1872, they steal the gate receipts of the Kansas City Fair. The James Boys, now heavily involved in robbery, turn their professional attention to trains. Near Adair, Iowa, they wreck an eastbound train, supposed to contain a large gold shipment. However, they collect only $3,000. Although the gang gets away safely, the railroads engage detectives to capture the Boys.

CHAPTER VI

At this time the western outlaw was just coming in—the men who, later, made Dodge City, Abilene, and other cowtowns famous, the men who 'operated' in Tombstone, Arizona, and in Texas and New Mexico. These men were killers; they swaggered up and down the streets, rolled into saloons, shot the lights out, and created unpleasant scenes at card tables.

Jesse James was not this kind at all. He never shot a light out in his life, never took a drink at a bar as he watched in the mirror some other man with a view of disposing of him, never rode down a street shooting right and left for the fun of it. He was in the business of train and bank robbery. And he made a success of it as no other man in America has ever done.

It is astonishing that Jesse could keep on courting his cousin with sheriffs and detectives hot upon his trail. One thing that helped him was that she was in Liberty part of the time; and the rest of the time she was in Kansas City, not too far away. Her mother had died and she had gone to live with her sister, Mrs. Charles McBride, in Kansas City.

Jesse Makes His Plans To Wed Zerelda Mimms

Jesse was twenty-six and a half; he had courted her nine years. She knew he was being sought, knew he was part of the 'James gang' which was attracting so much attention.

The detectives unceremoniously threw open the door and entered, demanding of Mrs. Samuels where her son was. She told them she did not know; they searched the house, and finally, convinced by her earnest manner, departed. Jesse said later that he could have killed at least two of the men, but there would have been crossfire and Zee might have been wounded.

Zee's mother had tried to dissuade her from the marriage, and so had her uncle, the Reverend William James. But they got nowhere, for Zee loved Jesse, and had ever since the time she helped nurse him back to health. Against all opposition, the day was set.

At this time marriage licenses were not necessary. The preacher could take care of everything. (If somebody had told Jesse that he would have to have his blood sampled in order to get married, he'd have shot him on the spot.) The local tradition is that he wanted to be married in the Baptist church in Kearney, but the church had read him out, and he still resented it. At this juncture another sister stuck up for Zee. If Zee loved Jesse and was willing to pay the price, then she should get married. This sister was Mrs. W. Boling Browder, who lived on a farm near Kearney; so it was decided to have the wedding there. The day fixed was April 24, 1874. Uncle William was fetched from Kansas City.

Jesse rode in out of nowhere, and the moment Uncle William saw him he began to upbraid him for his deeds of violence, and to say that Jesse could not properly take care of a bride and that she should not marry anybody on whose head was a reward of $10,000.

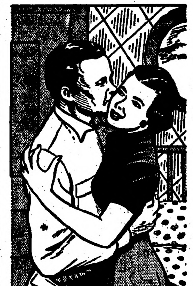
Zee defended Jesse loyally, saying that many of the deeds that Jesse was accused of were not true. To support this, Jesse took from his pocket newspaper clippings attributing desperate deeds to the James gang on the same days in different states. Finally, after urgent solicitation, Uncle William agreed to perform the ceremony, and in the presence of Zee's sister and her husband, at about nine o'clock at night, the two were finally married. I like to think of that scene—Jesse, with the two pistols he always wore, and beside him Zee Mimms, looking up at him so trustingly.

Meantime other things were happening.

They had been after the James-Youngers since the Columbia, Kentucky, robbery. When the railroads got involved, the word went out that the gang must be exterminated. The word was mainly carried by the Pinkertons.

Pinkerton's National Detective Agency was an organization dreaded by all lawbreakers. It had been founded in Chicago by a Scotsman, Allan Pinkerton. During the Civil War it had been a spy system for the Union armies. It had uncovered a plot to assassinate President-elect Abraham Lincoln. It had broken up many gangs of counterfeiters and express-company robbers. It seems to have been feared by all lawbreakers except the James Boys, who even taunted the Pinkertons because they could not find them. Headquarters of the agency was in Chicago, but, to be close to the Boys, a branch was opened at Kansas City, thirty miles from the James farm.

The first detective-bandit blood was drawn near Osceola, Missouri. Captain J. W. Allen and another Pinkerton man had reason to believe that part of the gang was hiding near there. Engaging a former local sheriff, Edwin B. Daniels, to show them the roads, the detectives rode here and there, posing not very successfully as cattle buyers. But on one of the roads they met two members of the Younger family. The Youngers began to question them about their cattle-buying. The city detectives knew as much about cooking whale blubber as they did about cattle buying, so in no time at all Allen was dead. Also the ex-sheriff who had so foolishly undertaken to 'show them around.' The other detective put spurs to his horse and ran away. One of the Youngers fired, and, even with this bouncing target, put a bullet through his hat.



Jesse did not participate in all of the gang's robberies, but it can be safely stated that he alone participated in the honeymoon.

Jack Ladd, Detective, Gets on James's Trail

But John Younger had been killed. That was the first blood. The score: two detective-sheriffs; one Younger. The date: March 16, 1874.

Neither of the Jameses was there. The members of the gang split up immediately after a 'ride', and didn't get together again until they had business to attend to. But the Jameses did know that they were being pressed and that, more and more, detectives were becoming a problem. The easy days of riding and reaping were over.

Now came the next move in the game. A rough-looking man who gave his name as Jack Ladd got a job as hired hand directly across the road from the James farm. The house still stands, much now as it was then. It is almost opposite the gate that leads up to the James home. You can stand on its porch and see the James home. The name of the farmer who owned it then was Daniel Askew.

Ladd worked in the fields where he could see the Jameses. Sometimes he went over to the well and pumped himself up a drink of water.

Ladd was a Pinkerton detective, reporting to the Kansas City office. But so well did he manage things that he was not suspected. There is evidence that he even went to Jesse James's wedding. But apparently it was felt that not enough results were coming out of his peeping and spying, so the Pinkertons sent another man to hurry things along.

This man pursued a plan that was incredibly stupid. He seems to have thought of the Jameses as one cut above mentally retired jackasses. He didn't know the boys were far from stupid and were protected by the finest armor in the world—friends.

At any rate, brisk, businesslike John W. Witcher arrived in Liberty to take care of the Boys in short order. Going to the bank, he made a deposit of Pinkerton money, then asked to see the president. "I've come here to capture the James Boys," he announced smugly.

"Well," said the bank president, "you'd better think twice. They're surrounded by friends and they're dead shots. In addition, they're as smart as you can find them."

The Chicago detective smiled.

The ex-sheriff advised care, but the Chicago go-getter said, "Oh, I've worked out plans! Don't worry. I'll soon have your boys where they belong."

Then Mr. Witcher went to a hotel, rented a room, and stayed overnight. The next morning he bought some new farm clothes, went back to his hotel, and put them on. Then he asked the hotel man to check his bundle of clothes.

There was an afternoon train to Kearney, and a pistol in his pocket, the confident detective got on that train. When the train reached Kearney, he descended and started to march down the road to the James farm, a distance of about three miles.

Suddenly a man stepped out of the elderberry bushes.

"Hello," said Jesse.

"Hello," Witcher returned confidently.

Jesse surveyed him carefully. "You seem to be a stranger in the neighborhood."

"Yes, I am," said the man genially. "In fact I've just got here."

"Have you?" said Jesse, with companionable interest. "Then maybe I can help you. I've lived here for some time."

"Maybe you can. I'm looking for work."

"What kind of work?"

"Farm work. I work as a hired man and I want somebody to employ me."

Just then two other men stepped out of the alders.

"He's a hired man looking for work," explained Jesse significantly.

Overconfident Witcher Is Shot and Killed

"Where's your grip?" asked one of them.

"I haven't got one," said Witcher, a bit awkwardly. "I was going to wait till I got settled down."

"Search him," said one of the men. A revolver was discovered.

"Where have you been working?" the men asked.

"At Beatrice, Nebraska."

"Who for?"

The detective gave a name.

"Did you work there long?"

"About five months."

"Let's see your hands."

The detective extended them. they were as soft as a baby's.

That was the end of the hired man with the soft hands. He was shot and killed.

But not there. In order to divert suspicion the detective was taken across the Missouri River at the Blue Mills ferry late at night, and the deed done in another county. The body was left by the side of the road. When the coroner rolled up the right shirt sleeve he found the initials 'J.W.W.' tattooed on the forearm.

It has always been believed locally that Witcher had the audacity to be going to the James farm to apply for work. He got about halfway.

In spite of the gathering clouds the James-Youngers engaged that year in two more robberies. The first came on May 12, 1874, at San Antonio, Texas. This was a comedown, for it was a stagecoach. But the returns were good—$3000. It just showed that humble means must not be overlooked. A posse was organized to chase the robbers slowly.

This time Jesse James had a watertight alibi. He said he was in Kansas City at his brother-in-law's. And he probably was, for he had been married only eighteen days and no man in his right mind would want to give up a honeymoon to rob a stagecoach.

December 13, 1874, at Muncie, Kansas; that was the second. About $2000 was taken. The farmers got up a posse, and that was as far as they got.

All in all, 1874 was a tremendously active year for Jesse James. A thumbnail summary.

January 15—Hot Springs, Arkansas.

January 31—Gad's Hill, Missouri.

March 10 — Detective Witcher killed.

March 1—Two Pinkertons killed near Osceola, Missouri.

April 24—Jesse marries.

May 12—San Antonio stagecoach robbery.

December 13—Train robbery at Muncie.

Of course Jesse did not participate in all of these affairs, but they all affected him. It can safely be stated that he alone participated in the honeymoon.

There is no record of what Detective Jack Ladd thought when Detective Witcher was killed, but it must not have been very pleasant, for he was doing the same thing that Witcher had set out to do. But he was playing his part far better; not telling the neighbors his plans, not checking his city clothes with a hotel keeper. He was just a dumb farmhand.

Every day he looked across the road to the James farm and talked to members of the family. The household was rather large; in addition to the mother and stepfather there were Fanny, John, and Archie Samuels, Charlotte, an old colored woman, and Ambrose, a small Negro boy. And Frank and Jesse . . . when they were there.

One day in January, 1875, Jack Ladd got word that the boys were coming back to see their mother. On their heads was a reward of $10,000 in an offer that practically amounted to 'dead or alive,' although it wasn't phrased that way. Big news. Just what he had been waiting for.

Jelly Hint

When covering jelly with paraffin, pour a thin layer of paraffin over the top of the jelly. Then put a strong piece of string on top of the paraffin with the end of the string over the edge of the glass. Now pour another layer of paraffin over the top. When you get ready to use the jelly, remove the paraffin with the string.

Agriculture Department Considers New Program for the Small Farmer

NEW FARM PLAN—As a result of a recent survey into the problems of the small American farmer, the Truman administration may come up with a new farm program in the near future more controversial than the Brannan plan and which could become one of the major issues in the 1952 presidential campaign.

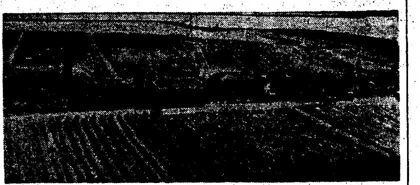
The survey was conducted with the idea of learning what the department could do to help the small farmer who is having difficulties because of inadequate land, machinery, livestock and know how. Thousands of meetings have been held in the home towns across the nation discussing crop control, price support, farm loans and other small farm problems.

As a result, a major question has developed: should the government buy up land, redivide it into "economic" or "efficient" units, and resell it to low-income farmers? Also, should present crop controls be extended?

Brannan believes that if productivity of substandard farms can be increased many agriculture problems would tend to disappear. On the other hand, many farm leaders have remained aloof and have not taken part in the meetings, criticizing Brannan's methods more than his objectives.

Two possible legislative proposals may come from the survey: (1) A technical assistance program for the less efficient farms and farmers, and (2) a farm-loan program designed to help such farmers acquire land, machinery, equipment, livestock and the know how to operate efficient farms.

Whatever the final form, any new farm plan, whether it incorporates the government buying and redivision of land or not, is bound to become a major campaign issue. Much of the opposition will come from the farm bureaus who have long resented Brannan as trying to usurp the roles of the private farm organizations and regimenting agriculture.



Meeting Place

BOYLE RESIGNS—The big question in political circles since William M. Boyle, Jr., close friend of President Truman resigned as chairman of the Democratic National Committee, is whether or not Guy Gabrielson, GOP national chairman, will be the next to go?

Boyle and Gabrielson have been under fire as having used their positions to influence the Reconstruction Finance Corporation into granting loans to companies they represented or were connected with. And although Gabrielson insists he will stay on, political observers believe his number is up, too.

In his letter of resignation Boyle gave health as his reason, insisting he had at all times conducted himself with "honor and propriety." He did admit in testimony during the congressional hearing that he accepted eight law cases involving government agencies, at fees totaling approximately $158,000, while serving as chairman of the national committee.

LESS CIVILIAN GOODS—Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson announced a cut in civilian goods production, effective January 1, that will be felt in the home towns across the nation.

The cutback in civilian production, 10 per cent for washing machines and stoves and even more in the automobile industry, will provide steel for the armament program which will hit full stride during the first three months of 1952.

The home town that has a school or hospital under construction will get enough materials to finish the project, but there will not be materials available to start new ones. As for farm machinery, so vital to agriculture and home town economy, there will be enough to support production "at a healthy and adequate level."

MIDDLE EAST BLOWUP—There is shaping up in the Middle East an explosion that could be felt in the smallest American community. The situation has developed as Egypt has increased pressure in recent weeks to remove the British from the Sudan and strategic Suez.

As a compromise, the United States, Britain, France and Turkey have asked Egypt to become the center of an alliance in the area against communism, but the proposal was received cooly by King Farouk's government.

This dispute is important to home town Americans because of the nation's interest in Suez, which if placed under Egyptian protection, would be a prize the Russians could take with little difficulty. The British, under present treaties with Egypt, have the legal right to maintain troops in the canal zone which is her economic life-line. She will not back down in her determination to remain in the zone. Thus, if the Egyptian government attempts to remove them by force the British will resist. If the Russians should decide to step in at this point, the world would become involved in World War III.

There is a chance that Egypt may accept the west's proposal of joint defense of the area, but only because she is not in a position to defend herself.

NEW DECLARATION—In a major speech last week President Truman again declared American foreign policy is "based upon the hope that it will be possible to live, without a war, in the same world as the Soviet Union—if the free nations have adequate defenses." And he again offered to "sit down with the Soviet Union" and other nations to work out agreements to relieve mankind of "the horror of another world war" and provide the basis for "a durable peace."

The President pointed out the central theme of America's present foreign policy and defense program: "So long as one country has the power and the force to overwhelm others and so long as that country has aggressive intentions real peace is unattainable. The stronger we become, the more possible it will be to work out solid and lasting arrangements that will prevent war. Our strength will make for peace."

IRAN'S OIL—Mohammed Mossadegh, premier of Iran, who has taken the British-Iranian oil dispute to the United Nations Security Council, told UN diplomats to keep their hands off the dispute and warned "we will not be coerced."

In presenting the Iranian point of view he said there are only two questions open to negotiations: (1) Compensation for British investments in the now nationalized Anglo-Iranian Oil company, and (2) possible sale of oil to Britain.

He then made his strongest point: "We will not take action and will not engage in negotiations affecting our internal affairs under pressure. To do so would not only constitute an admission that we are not a sovereign and equal nation, but would eventually be fatal to our independence."

The question remains who will operate the huge Anglo-Iranian Oil company refineries. The Iranians do not have the technical know-how and the British experts have already been sent home. How can Iran sell oil when it can't produce it?

THUMB-SUCKING

A Natural Habit, Noted Doctor Says

Since the beginning of time mothers have tried to stop their babies from sucking their thumbs. It now appears, if one is to believe Dr. I. Newton Kugelmass, noted pediatrician of New York, that "thumb-sucking is as normal as breathing" and is not to be worried about until the child is over two years of age.

Thumb-sucking usually declines after the second year of life, the noted physician observes. If it persists after the age of two, he has discovered as the result of intensive studies, "the child feels unloved, unwanted, guilty, resentful or in need of consolation."

What is the remedy if a child continues to suck his thumb? "Treat the child, not the symptoms," advises Dr. Kugelmass.

YOUR NICKEL AND RAIL SERVICE

Like the old gray mare of yesteryear, the American nickel isn't what it used to be. The 5-cent piece doesn't pack much punch these days at the grocery store, the meat market and other places where you buy the things you need.

The nickel has meant less and less to Great Northern, too, in the past dozen years—especially for buying things the railway must have to provide transportation services.

Wages are a good example, for payroll is our biggest expense item. A nickel was worth 4 minutes of average employe service in 1939, but good for only 1¾ minutes as of July 1 this year.

In addition to the 140 per cent increase in Great Northern's payroll costs since 1939, there has been a 131 per cent advance in prices of materials and supplies in the past 12 years.

In 1945—when prices really began climbing—the general level of railway freight rates was no higher than in 1939, and somewhat lower than in the late 20s and 30s.

However, the unit selling price of Great Northern's service—the average charge for moving one ton of freight one mile—has risen only 35 per cent in the past six years!

What has been the effect of the postwar increases on the cost of buying railway transportation? We're now talking about your nickel, and how much railway service it will buy you today.

Ten years ago 5 cents would have paid for hauling 1 ton of average freight 6 miles on Great Northern. Today the nickel still represents big value in railway transportation, for it is good for hauling 1 ton of average freight 4 miles!

On almost any basis that can be devised, railway transportation charges relatively are a smaller part of the final price of what you buy or sell than in any prewar year.

A railway freight bill marked "paid" is a receipt for the world's most economical mass transportation. The American railway system is the one big reason why people of this country produce more and live better than any other people on this earth.

To Our Sponsors

The following was written by Mrs Johnny Nelson and read at the 4-H program Saturday night.

These are the folks sponsoring us
So to each we wish to give a "plug"
To show how much it means to us
They have faith in us and our club

First there's our local bank,
With George at the till.
If Ruth or Gladys can't take care of your cash, Alton will.

The Creamery too, helps us make our dough.
With Gilman and Arnold emptying
the cans
They make the best Land O' Lakes
butter. You'll find in any land.

The Holt Merc is our general store Where Louie, Viv and Bea do their bit. If they don't have what you order (but they usually do).
They'll tour the town to find it.

Then we skip to the Cities Service
With Walt in the driver's seat
Kenny and Andy do the repair,
If you need anything else
Ronnie will give you the air

Holt Cafe is where you eat and drink
With Murnett and Irene as props.
Grandma Johnson does a lot of cookin'
The service is really tops.

The Northland Grain - Seed elevator
Has Olaf and Orlin at the head
The'll buy ons grain and cattails too
To keep the farmer out of the red.

Then we have the Friendly Tavern
With Myrt and Harris behidd the bar
They keep a clean place to meet in Where friends gather from near & far

Gunheims, too, is our general store
Where Charley, Christine and Mike abide
They have served us many years.
We point to them as good citizens with pride.

Now Albert Bennes and Emma have had a cafe.
As long as I can remember
Where we kids got candy, ice cream and bars
From January to December.

John Luoto, too, is one of our men
Who is always on the jump
He sometimes has Rick to help him
Take the good Ethel out of the pump

We can't forget Ma's Eat Shop
Where Carrie cooks and bakes
She sells candy, pop and all things good.
She thinks dieting is a fake.

Of course Hartley, our Standard Oil man. We couldn't get along without.
He answers our call, is on the ball
With Permalabe and Red Crown in the spout

Now last, but not least I'll have you know.
Is our good old Holt Weekly News.
With Ole and Mabel to set the type
They can really give us the "snuss"

To those kind folks we say Thank
You. We hope you enjoyed our show
To please you we've tried our best
"To make the Best Better" is our 4-H motto.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Hanson, Sheryl and Alan of Petersburg, N. D spent the week end at the Helmer Hanson home in Thief River Falls and Alfred Larson home.

Congress Goes Home After Passing $5.6 Billion Tax-Increase Measure

CONGRESS—Members of the first session of the 82nd congress have deserted Washington and will, between now and January 8 when the second session convenes, try to convince the people of the home towns of their great achievements. The fact remains, however, that the record is not too good and the prospects for the second session, because it will meet during a presidential election year, are even worse.

The congress spent week in the MacArthur hearings, the Kefauver crime inquiry, probes into subversive activities and corruption in government. Most of the important legislation enacted dealt with foreign affairs while the domestic field was nearly forgotten. There was no civil rights progress; no marked advance in the Hoover plan for government reorganization, excepting reform of the R.F.C.; civil defense remained a stepchild; needed amendments to the Defense Production Act were neglected; statehood for Alaska and Hawaii remain undecided.

The congress set another mark, the longest unbroken session of any peacetime congress since 1913-14, with the senate in session 172 days and the house 163. The senate oratory filled 7,927 pages of the congressional record and the house 6,003 pages. And during the session 180 public laws and 338 private laws were enacted.

In the dying hours of the session the house and senate enacted three bills authorizing the spending of $13,000,000, all aimed at strengthening the security of the U.S. at home and abroad. It swelled to $95,000,000,000 the appropriations passed during the year, of which $80,000,000,000 was for defense purposes.

TAXES—President Truman signed the $5,691,000,000 tax-increase bill, one of the last measures passed in the first session of the 82nd congress, and on November 1 the average home towners will begin to pay it. Besides increases ranging from 11 to 12 per cent for most taxpayers, excise taxes go up on a long list of items including liquor, gasoline, and household appliances. Bigger income and excess-profits taxes are in store for some industries.

The President, however, was very definite in his opinion of the increase measure. To begin with, he felt it was not enough (he had asked for $10,000,000,000 and indicated he would ask congress in January to improve the tax law. He criticized it as containing too many loopholes and in some respects providing additional means by which wealthy individuals can escape paying their proper share.

He also criticized the Jenner rider permitting states to publicize relief rolls without losing their share of federal social security allotments. This, he said, is quite unrelated to the purpose of raising revenue and "may well result in unwarranted publicity and personal indignity and unhappiness for aged people and others receiving public assistance."

THE POWDER KEG—The Middle East hes become the powder keg which may blow the world into World War III. Since ordering the British out of the Suez canal zone and the Sudan, armed clashes have occurred between forces of the two countries. Egypt has ordered general mobilization of man power in wartime fashion and the British have reinforced their canal forces with troops, planes and warships.

The Egyptian crisis is a manifestation of the growing fever of nationalism in the Moslem states which started when Iran nationalized its oil industry and kicked the British out. But unlike the Iranian question, the Suez and its safety is of vital importance to the free world. On the surface Egypt would seem too weak to throw the British out, but the west fears a series of incidents that could set the entire Middle East aflame.

Should the crisis reach to point of open warfare between the two countries the Communists can be expected to step in and World War III could start at any moment.

VATICAN ENVOY—President Truman nominated Gen. Mark W. Clark, chief of the Army Field Forces, to be the first United States ambassador to Vatican City. American diplomatic relations with the Vatican, which had been terminated by act of congress in 1867, were resumed twelve years ago by President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Since early 1950, however, there has been no diplomatic relationship with the Vatican and President Truman's nomination of Gen. Clark was unexpected.

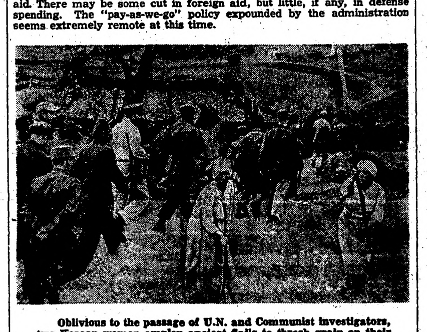
Because of considerable criticism concerning the move, the President announced several days later he had decided not to carry out diplomatic representation at the Vatican until congress has acted on the controversal issue. Congress will probably take the matter under consideration shortly after it convenes January 8.

FEDERAL DEFICIT—The government has operated in the red this year. Next year it will go even deeper in the red and nothing that congress has done or economies will prevent it.

Expenditure for the fiscal year 1952 will amount to approximately $70 billion, it is estimated. Receipts will amount to $63.7 billion, leaving a deficit of $6.3 billion.

In the fiscal year 1953 expenditures will amount to an estimated $85-$90 billion while receipts will total $66.6 billion. This leaves about $18.4-$23.4 billion deficit.

Congress is not likely to increase taxes next year because it is a presidential election year, most observers believe. The only way to cut down this deficit would be to reduce defense spending and foreign aid. There may be some cut in foreign aid, but little, if any, in defense spending. The "pay-as-we-go" policy expounded by the administration seems extremely remote at this time.



Oblivious to the passage of U.N. and Communist investigators, two Korean women employ ancient flails to thresh grain on their farm near Kaeson so their families may eat. And while the harvest scene was taking place across war-torn Korea, Allied and Communist negotiators were scheduled to resume peace talks at the small village of Panemunjom. Whether the renewed talks would bring peace was another question. Many Allied officials believe that Moscow and Peiping have been shadow boxing and will continue to do so until they can make up their minds on just what to do—peace or all-out war. Meanwhile, fighting continues in Korea with a marked increase in air activity. One air battle involved nearly 250 Allied and Communist jets, history's great jet battle.

Philosopher Says U.S. Morals Unchanged

Home towners across the nation who have been depressed at the increasing reports of moral decline in the country can relax according to one of America's greatest thinkers. Dr. John Dewey, dean of American philosophers and father of the progressive education system, says the nation's morals are not worse than they have ever been.

The distinguished educator, who is 95 years old, did see a weakening in family relationships. Any decline in morality of youth, he said can be blamed on parents and not the schools, government leaders, or religious teachers. As for the West Point cribbing scandal and "fix" cases, he said, "As far as I can judge it's very much the same from one period to another."

"Smile like that again," he said.

HOMER CROY'S
Jesse James
WAS MY NEIGHBOR

THE STORY SO FAR: A thoroughgoing bandit now, Jesse is 26 years old, and he has been courting his cousin, Zee Mimms, intermittently for nine years. Despite the fact that Jesse is being sought continuously by detectives, the two decide to get married and fix the date as April 24, 1874. It is a combination wedding and sentry duty, for detectives are all around them; however, they are safely married and slip away for a honeymoon. Shortly after, the Pinkerton's send a man to "get" the gang. The Boys kill him on sight. Then, in January, 1875, Jack Ladd, an undercover man for Pinkerton, hears the James boys are coming home to see their mother.

CHAPTER VII

He got the word to the Kansas City office. (It would be interesting but it has not been possible to find out how he communicated with his headquarters.) Plans had been made, and now they began to go forward. Nine Pinkerton men got on the train in Kansas City and rode to Kearney, on their way to the farm which knew nothing of these grim preparations. They rode past Kearney to the point nearest the farm, a distance of about three miles. Since the agency was working with the railroads, the conductor stopped the train at the place requested. Then the nine men started walking in the silence of the night toward the log cabin. Jack Ladd crept out of the Askew farmhouse and joined them; now they were ten.

Timber came down to the house (later it was cleared and became a cornfield; it's now pasture).

The ten silent men arrived at the stable and one of them opened his bull's-eye lantern. Two of the horses showed signs of having been recently ridden. Just what Jack Ladd had reported! Except that it was wholly and completely wrong. Fanny and John Samuels had been to a party at one of the neighbor's; they had stayed late and, afraid of being scolded, had ridden fast.

Jesse and Frank were not at home.

Lawmen Throw Bomb Through the Window

The ten detectives approached the house.

Creeping up as silently as shadows on the peacefully sleeping household, they threw a black-powder bomb through the window. I have held half of the brass shell in my hands; it is about the size of half a football. The bomb had a fuse, but there was danger that the fuse might be extinguished, so the detectives had thoughtfully wrapped the bomb in gunnysacking saturated with kerosene. And there it lay, smoking and stinking. The family awoke in consternation.

In the room was a fireplace. Groping through the dim light, Mrs. Samuels got the fire shovel and began edging the devilish mass toward the fireplace. Too late. It went off with a terrible explosion, taking with it her hand.

The scene became vivid to me when I interviewed E. Price Hall, who saw part of it with his own eyes. At the time we talked together he was eighty-seven years old. Once, for six years, he had been a deputy sheriff. He had an oldfashioned silver watch, with a heavy chain, in his vest pocket. His vest was open and the chain and the watch held the two sides of the vest together. He was living in Liberty. We sat on the front porch in rocking-chairs and rocked and talked and watched the cars go by. Now and then a neighbor passed and called out, "Hello, Price!"

At the time of the explosion he was a boy; his father's farm and the James farm adjoined. The Halls were awakened by the commotion and screaming, and young Price hurried to the James house. The father did not go.

"When I arrived the stench was still in the house," said Mr. Hall. "Mrs. Samuels' hand was still clinging to her arm by a shred of skin. Dr. Samuels had heated water and was preparing to cut the pieces of skin. Little Archie Samuels was lying on a cot, groaning. A fragment from the bomb had been driven into his side, and his lifeblood was running out in spite of all his father could do. Dr. Samuels was trying to wait on both at once. Archie continued to groan and his voice got weaker. At dawn he died. When he was going out, his mother came and stood by his cot, sobbing—not for her arm but for her boy. It was the most dreadful scene I ever saw.

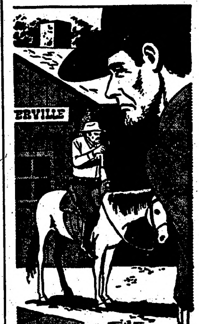
"Shortly after dawn I went out to explore the yard. There had been a light snow and there were the tracks of the men. I followed the tracks a short way and found where the men had sat down on a log. I found a pistol one of them had lost. On the handle was stamped the letters 'P. G. G.' This stood for 'Pinkerton's Government Guard.' Allan Pinkerton had organized the United States Secret Service and he had official government standing.

"We followed the tracks to the railroad and saw where the men had stood waiting for the train. They had enough authority to stop the train. Then they got on."

I asked E. Price Hall if he still had the pistol. He said he had kept it several years, then it had disappeared; he does not know what became of it.

The detectives did not go quite free. Ambrose, the Negro boy, seized the family shotgun, rushed out, and fired at the gray figures. There was a groan, then the sound of a body falling. The man was carried off by the others, but he died on the train as it was pulling into Brookfield, Missouri. The body was taken to Chicago for burial. The man turned out to be Jack Ladd, which made things as they should be.

There are two sides to any story. I insert here the point of view of the Pinkerton Agency regarding the alleged bombing. It was given to me in an interview with Ralph Dudley, general manager of the agency, at the New York offices:



Next the Boys looked around and decided that Otterville, Missouri, would be a good place to accomplish something they had in mind.

The facts, as we understand them, are based on the circumstances as reported by Allan Pinkerton and from utterances of Dr. Samuels and Frank James to relatives and neighbors. Our men, and other law enforcement officers, approached the James homestead. They found it was a citadel, with the windows shuttered and barred. They called to those inside to open up and be questioned, but those inside refused to do this. One of our men then pried open a window. The interior was dark except for a fireplace which gave off insufficient illumination to locate and identify those concealing themselves therein.

Our men had with them a device for illuminating a darkened place. It was something akin in nature to the firepots which later came to be used on the highways. It was shaped roughly like a globe, with a long neck; in this neck was a wick. The device itself was of light metal but on the bottom were strips of iron; this was so that if the firepot rocked over on its side, the weight at the bottom would make it return to an upright position. The contents were probably kerosene and turpentine, although this is not exactly known. At the time, Allan Pinkerton referred to the illumination that the device gave off as 'Gercian fire.'

Heat From Fireplace Exploded the Device

The device was tossed in to illuminate the interior. The family then displayed activity. Dr. Samuels took a firestick and began to push the device toward the fireplace, finally getting it in. The device—coming in contact with the hot embers—created gases. These expanded. The result was an explosion. One of the heavy straps struck Mrs. Samuels in the arm; another struck Archie Samuels in the head. Archie died from his wound and later the lower portion of Mrs. Samuels' arm was amputated in consequence of complications which set in.

The shock of what had happened to their mother, and the death of their half-brother, embittered Jesse and Frank James. They were now more definitely aligned against the law than ever. Especially detectives. They became merciless toward detectives. Their wives acted as listening posts for the Boys, and when communicating with them by letter would pass along all the information they could about the detectives.

Now came the problem of Daniel Askew. Did he know? Did he suspect. Those must have been tense days for him.

A little less than three months after the explosion, on April 12, 1875, he took a bucket from the shelf in the kitchen and went down to the spring to dip a pail of drinking water. He got the water and was carrying it back when there was a rustling behind the woodpile. Three shots rang out. When they picked him up, there were three bullet holes in his body.

There were no arrests.

Was he guilty? Did he know? My own opinion is that he did know. There has always been a local belief that the night of the explosion his voice in the yard had been recognized. Anyway, the now-desperate Boys were not taking any chances. Life was closing in. There had been easy, carefree days on Uncle D. W.'s ranch in California, but those were gone. Would they ever return? And the two wives, what did they think? How did they feel? What kind of life stretched ahead of them?

The country was immeasurably shocked by the Pinkerton attack and murder. Sympathy went to the James Boys, dangerous and bloody as they were. People in this Middle West section felt the Jameses were a product of the savagery of the Border Warfare, and were willing to overlook some of their acts. And although they didn't say it openly, there was that private and personal feeling about the uncontrolled banks and greedy railroads.

At this point the State of Missouri got up as weird a document as could be found in a day's ride on a dogsled. It was proposed, in the state legislature, that if the 'James Boys and their associates' would come in they would be pardoned by the governor of the State of Missouri for all acts that had occurred before and during the Civil War, and would be given a 'fair trial' for all 'incidents' that had taken place since. What it shook down to was, 'Come in, boys, and we'll treat you right.'

It came within a hair of passing.

Even if it had passed, the Boys would not have come in. The best they could have hoped for was life imprisonment, and I think they would have passed that up.

But no matter who was after them and with what means, the Boys had to live, and by now they knew only one way. Four men rode into Huntington, West Virginia, the first day of September, 1875, and rode out with $2000.

One Bandit Killed After Huntington Job

There was the old familiar thing of the posse. But this time one of the gang was killed—not by a member of the posse, but by two farmers who thought the men looked suspicious and ordered them to throw up their hands. The robber killed was Tom McDaniels, a recent recruit. The detectives, who had been doing such a sugar-and-water business for so long, finally accomplished something. They arrested a suspect known as Keene and sent him to prison in West Virginia for twelve years. The other bandits had been Frank James and Cole Younger. Neither got a scratch. Jesse—so far as is known—was not one of the riders.

Next the Boys looked around and decided that Otterville, Missouri, would be a good place to accomplish something they had in mind. Otterville was a small town near Sedalia. Trains passed that way. The date was fixed for July 7, 1876. And scheduled to be tied up inadvertently in the Otterville affair (according to the talk that arose later) was a young boy who was still alive when this book came to be written.

I was told that Asbury Good-Knight knew a great deal about the Otterville robbery—'If he will talk.' I found he was a farmer living three miles south of Sedalia, eighty-nine years old. But I interviewed him at the Missouri State Fair in Sedalia, not at the farm, where I had missed him. First he warned me about the spelling of his name.

Yes, he had known Jesse James. And that was about all he said, despite energetic probing. He did, however, add one detail about the Otterville robbery that had not been known. In the express car was a 'through' safe; this meant it was locked, with no key for it. The safe was only sheet-iron, but heavy enough to serve ordinary purposes. It gazed defiantly at the intruders. A fireman's coal-hammer was brought, and one after another the robbers banged away at the hinges. The safe bounced and shook but remained faithful to its trust.

Then Cole Younger, who was the biggest and heftiest among the visitors, took the fireman's hammer and gave the hinges—so said Mr. Good-Knight—hell. The safe bounced a little more, but surrendered not an inch. A sharp-pointed pick was found and Cole mounted a box to get the necessary elevation. A piece of chalk—used for marking a bulletin board—was discovered. On top of the safe Cole proceeded to draw a circle, then gave it everything he had. The safe withstood the onslaught a few moments, then gave up the ghost. Cole put his hand into the hole. Someone brought forth the trusty grain sack, and into it went the safe's treasures. Later they were found to total $14,000.

Cheese, a trace of onion and caraway or poppy seeds are baked right on top of this unusual bread! According to Mrs. Vici, "The recipe had been in Father's family for many generations, and he gave it to Mother, who made it every Wednesday and Saturday. She always served it warm, with hot soup or hot coffee. It tasted equally good for breakfast, luncheon or supper." BAKE at 425°F. for 15 to 20 minutes. MAKES 15x10 or 13x9-inch coffee bread. Dissolve 1 package RED STAR Special Active Dry Yeast (or 1 cake of compressed yeast) in ¼ cup warm water (110° to 115°F.) COMBINE 2 tablespoons shortening, 1 tablespoon sugar, 1 teaspoon salt*, ¾ cup scalded milk. Cool to lukewarm. BLEND IN the dissolved yeast. ADD 2¼ cups sifted Pillsbury's Best Enriched Flour*; mix thoroughly. KNEAD dough on lightly floured board for 3 minutes; place in greased bowl and cover. LET RISE in warm place (85° to 90° F.) until double in bulk, about 1 to 1½ hours. PRESS dough into greased 15 x 10 or 13x9x2-inch pan. LET RISE in warm place until double in bulk, about 45 minutes. COMBINE 1 egg, 3 tablespoons milk, ¾ teaspoon grated onion, ¼ teaspoon salt, ½ lb. (2½ cups) yellow cheese, grated; spread over top of dough. Sprinkle with 1½ teaspoons caraway seed or poppy seed, if desired. BAKE in hot oven (425° F.) 15 to 20 minutes. Serve warm.

"Talks Turkey" —Long Distance

Some people chuckled when Sonny Fisher rented a home recording machine to record the noise his flock of turkeys make.

"I sent the recording to a buyer for a super-market chain," Sonny said. "I told them 'My turkeys speak for themselves—listen to this record!' They not only took my birds, but bought the record!"

"Why did they want the record?" I asked him. "Very simple," he says. "They're going to play it over the loud speakers in their stores—and then an announcer on another record reminds the customers that turkeys are plentiful and a good buy."

From where I sit, it's not always smart to make fun of someone just because he does things a little differently. I think a glass of beer is the most refreshing beverage there is. You — or Sonny — may prefer something else. But who's to decide one's right and the other's wrong? Let's stay "on record" that everyone's entitled to his own tastes and opinion.

YOUR NICKEL AND RAIL SERVICE

Like the old gray mare of yesteryear, the American nickel isn't what it used to be. The 5-cent piece doesn't pack much punch these days at the grocery store, the meat market and other places where you buy the things you need.

The nickel has meant less and less to Great Northern, too, in the past dozen years—especially for buying things the railway must have to provide transportation services.

Wages are a good example, for payroll is our biggest expense item. A nickel was worth 4 minutes of average employe service in 1939, but good for only 1¾ minutes as of July 1 this year.

In addition to the 140 per cent increase in Great Northern's payroll costs since 1939, there has been a 131 per cent advance in prices of materials and supplies in the past 12 years.

In 1945—when prices really began climbing—the general level of railway freight rates was no higher than in 1939, and somewhat lower than in the late 20s and 30s.

However, the unit selling price of Great Northern's service—the average charge for moving one ton of freight one mile—has risen only 35 per cent in the past six years!

What has been the effect of the postwar increases on the cost of buying railway transportation? We're now talking about your nickel, and how much railway service it will buy you today.

Ten years ago 5 cents would have paid for hauling 1 ton of average freight 6 miles on Great Northern. Today the nickel still represents big value in railway transportation, for it is good for hauling 1 ton of average freight 4 miles!

On almost any basis that can be devised, railway transportation charges relatively are a smaller part of the final price of what you buy or sell than in any prewar year.

A railway freight bill marked "paid" is a receipt for the world's most economical mass transportation. The American railway system is the one big reason why people of this country produce more and live better than any other people on this earth.

Deer Season to Open Saturday

Minnesota's nine-day deer season opens Saturday, Nov. 17 and Frank D. Blair, director of Game and Fish, says hunters should be be sure of their target and make the shot good. A fraction of a second to make sure it is a deer and not a cow or a man and a good aim to hit the heart will prevent accidents and get the deer.

A good hit will kill immediately, says the game official. If you are sure of a dead deer, move in; but if the deer is only wounded it is better to go slow. A wounded animal will lie down and if not disturbed, will probably stiffen up too much to move. On the other hand, if followed too fast, a wounded deer may travel many miles and left to die without being found, Hunters should never shoot until they know it is a deer. Since the 1944 season 47 deer hunters have been killed and 109 injured.

Every deer hunter must wear a red cap and coat and should never use a white handkerchief in the woods. It is against the law to hunt while intoxicated or under the influence of narcotics.

THE STORY SO FAR: Jack Ladd and nine other Pinkerton operatives have laid a plan to kill or capture Frank and Jesse. They surround the Samuel's house the night the Boys are supposed to be there. Frank and Jesse aren't home, but the detectives don't know that. They throw a black powder bomb through the window. An explosion blows off the right hand of the Boys' mother, Mrs. Samuels, and mortally injures Archie, Mr. and Mrs. Samuels' young son. Pinkerton's version of the story is that the bomb was not a bomb, but a crude kerosene lighting device which exploded when it came in contact with the hot fireplace. Frank and Jesse become more embittered.

CHAPTER VIII

During the course of our talk, Mr. Good-Knight said, "There's one other Jesse James man in Sedalia. You ought to go to see him. He was Jesse James' last letter-carrier." And then he gave me his name.

Jesse James's last letter-carrier! I padded off as fast as I could go. I found Jacob Dirck in his home at 407 North Summit Street, Sedalia. He was eighty-four. The letter-carrying had taken place when he was a boy living on the Warsaw Road, east of Brownington, Missouri. He said that, when pressed, Jesse James hid his horses and men in the timber; no one could approach without being seen or heard, and there was always more than one way out of the timber. Jesse met him one day on the road and asked him if he would like to carry letters for him. He said he would pay well.

At this time Jesse was being hunted by the detectives and did not dare use the mails. Dirck agreed to help, for no one would suspect him. The boy would stroll along the road, give a whistle, then go into the thick timber. There Jesse would hand him a letter and tell him where to find the man addressed. Then Jesse would give him $2.50. Whenever Jesse was in that section he would call on the boy to carry letters and would ask him the news.

Jesse Makes Youngster Help With Piling Ties

"I found him a fine man to deal with," said Jake Dirck reminiscently. "I never attached any wrong to it; lots of people had a secret sympathy for him and would have done the same if they had a chance, especially they would on account of the banks. Nobody liked banks. I mistrust banks to this day. . . .

"Did Asbury Good-Knight tell you about him and Jesse? He helped Jesse hold up a train! I guess that will make a good item for the book you say you're writing. One evening he was walking along the railroad cut, just a lad, when all of a sudden he saw some dark figures approaching him. They approached close and looked at him carefully. Then one of them said, 'Boy, you turn a hand here.' So saying they began to pile crossties on the track. When the job was done, one of them lit a lantern, handed it to Asbury, and said, 'You mount the ties and flag down the flyer.' Asbury mounted them—with considerable trepidation, I reckon—and waved the lantern. Of course it wasn't all due to him, for the rest of the gang had secretly boarded the train at a watertank down the line, and now climbed over the tender with their guns pointed at the engineer and fireman . . . I always understood that Jesse gave Asbury some money for his help, even if it was against his will, but on that score I don't know of my own personal knowledge. I hold, in similar circumstances, anybody would have taken the money. I know I would."

The Otterville robbery wasn't a complete triumph for the outlaws, for, later, one of the members was arrested and sent to the penitentiary for four years. This feat was accomplished not by the Pinkertons, but by a member of the St. Louis Police Department; and the man tucked away in prison was Kerry Hobbs, who was not exactly the brains of the gang. His contribution had been to hold the horses. For the others, it was the same old story that runs with a comic hoofbeat through these pages; a hastily formed pursuit returning with imaginative tales but no outlaws.

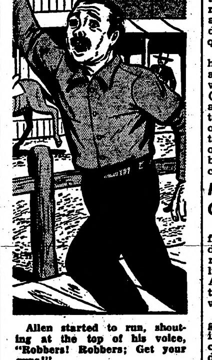
Moving into his second decade of banditry, Jesse James found that he had to range farther and farther afield. The banks and trains in his section were growing more and more alert. The old days when one of the gang could go in and ask to have $100 bill changed, and then bring out a pistol, were vanishing. Horses and strange men on the street now attracted attention, especially when they appeared to be cattle buyers. (One reason the

Now Jesse and Frank and Cole Younger began to look about them for a new place to open up. They had operated in Missouri, Kentucky, West Virginia, Iowa, Kansas, Arkansas, and Texas. Now where?

Bill Chadwell, a recent recruit, came forth with an idea. Although born in Missouri, he had lived in Minnesota, and he said that the banks in that state had more money than they knew what to do with. The men answered that if they could get their hands on it, they would know what to do with it.

But Jesse counseled against the idea. It was northern country, they had no friends there, no old ex-guerrillas they could bed-down with, no letter carriers, no knowledge of streams and back roads, no friendly blacksmiths to shoe their horses in a hurry. But Bill painted such a land of milk and honey—with not a single bee—that the others persuaded Jesse to fall in with the idea. And he did, hesitatingly.

Chadwell said that Mankato, Minnesota, was a hive of vast opportunities, so the eight rode north in that direction on the finest horseflesh obtainable.



Allen started to run, shouting at the top of his voice, "Robbers! Robbers! Get your guns!"

The men were feeling fine; the air was surcharged with success. An example of how confident they were took place in my Nodaway County, in the town of Graham. Jesse and Frank arrived one evening about sunset and went to the hotel run by Mr. Freytag. The latter's son, Frank Freytag, was later postmaster of St. Joseph, and it was he who passed the story along. Jesse (as it turned out to be) told young Frank that he had been riding hard and wanted his horse watered and rubbed down. The boy led the animal to Brown's Springs, a short distance from the hotel, and took care of it. When Frank came back, Jesse was so pleased that he gave him a silver dollar, an immense sum of money. Mr. Freytag asked the men to sign the hotel register. They looked at each other, then Frank James with great good humor said, "We're queer. We never sign a hotel register until we're ready to leave."

Bandit Gang Moves Into Minnesota

The next morning the two had breakfast and were ready to go to their horses when Mr. Freytag reminded them of the register.

"Oh yes," said Frank James, "where is it?" And he signed, with a great flourish, 'Frank and Jesse James, Kearney, Clay County, Mo.' Then, mounting their horses, the two rode gaily away. They felt safe; no one was going to chase them; they were bold, confident, assured.

The eight converged upon Minnesota.

Cole Younger and Charlie Pitts, who had been teamed together, rode into the town of Madelia, Minnesota, and registered at the Flanders House. Cole Younger signed his name as 'J. C. King,' a play on 'King Cole.' Charlie Pitts signed himself 'Jack Ladd.' a joke in Charlie's estimation, for he did not know that Jack Ladd had been killed the night of the bomb explosion.

The proprietor, Thomas L. Vought, welcomed the cattle buyers with fine Minnesota hospitality. Mr. King wanted to know about the roads he would later be driving his cattle over, and especially he wanted to know if any of the roads were closed, for he did not want to get his cattle in a cul-de-sac. Mr. Vought told him, as a proprietor should.

The next day J. C. King and Jack Ladd rode away on their quest for cattle. They had on their linen dusters to keep off cattle grime.

The gang finally got together in St. Paul, Minnesota, where they engaged rooms at the Merchants Hotel and at the European Hotel, and then went out to see a baseball game between the St. Paul Red Caps and the Winona Clippers. It was the last of August, 1876—the year of the famous Philadelphia Centennial.

The men pretty well knew the country now—the principal roads, the marshes, and the timbered spots. They were all in good humor. They would have another Otterville. (Its success was still upon them, for it was only two months away.) Off they jogged for Mankato.

They went to the bank that Bill Chadwell had proclaimed as overflowing with milk and honey, and the first bee appeared. When they got there a number of people were standing near the bank, gaping. The outlaws thought word had got out that something was afoot, so they withdrew. They came back the second time; the gapers were still there. The gang rode away, defeated. If they had only known that the crowd on the street was merely watching the construction work on a building next door, after the immemorial way of busy men.

But they didn't and so rode away. None of the cattle buyers knew how this would change history.

Now they had to find a new place, to fulfill their ambitions. They rode through Janesville, Cordova, and Millersburg, as uncertain as a drove of bees that had lost its queen.

Some days before, two of them had scouted Northfield, Minnesota, a one-bank, two-college town. It wasn't 'choice' but it would do. (The two colleges were Carleton and St. Olaf; and there they are today. But three banks now. Another thing worth noting is that the town today is the 'Holstein Center of America.' However, on September 7, 1876, it was no place for cows or college students.)

Plans Go All Awry On Northfield Job

The outlaws met in the woods five miles west of Northfield. They decided to join up, so five of them rode into town and calmly had lunch in two of the restaurants. After lunch they strolled about, then rode back and joined the three waiting in the woods.

Things now began to happen. The gang approached the town, breaking up so as not to arouse suspicion. A river runs through the middle of Northfield, by name of Cannon. Across it was a wooden bridge. Three mounted men rode slowly and casually across this bridge and tied their horses to a hitchrack near the First National Bank. The three were Jesse James, Charlie Pitts, and Bob Younger. Drygoods boxes lay in front of a store, and on these the men lazily sat down, pretending they had nothing better to do than stare at the passersby. If the passersby had known that the men had enough artillery to subdue the Sac and Fox, they would have jumped out of their skins.

In a few moments two other tourists rode up the street, gazing at the interesting sights. They were Cole Younger and Clell Miller, sightseers from Missouri.

Just at this moment Cole Younger's saddlegirth went wrong, at least he pretended it did; getting off, he essayed to fix it, pulling and hauling at the stubborn article. meantime strategically managing to keep in the middle of the street where he could see both ways. The three loafers on the drygoods boxes got up and sauntered into the bank. Clell Miller went to the door and shut it, walking rather rapidly.

And now the first thing went wrong. While Clell Miller was still standing by the door, a local man came up to go into the bank. He was J. S. Allen, a hardware merchant. The last thing in the world that Clell Miller wanted was for some local person to go into the bank during rush hour, so he grabbed Allen by the shoulder and yelled, "Keep away from that door!"

Then something happened that Clell wasn't expecting. Allen jerked away and started to run down the street, shouting at the top of his voice, "Robbers! Robbers! Get your guns!"

Until now there had been only five men, but at this moment three new horsemen appeared: Frank James, Bill Chadwell, and Jim Younger. Seeing how the situation was developing, they began to ride up and down, shooting and yelling like Indians. Clell Miller had gotten back on his horse, and he and Cole Younger joined in to.

The innocent bystander had to suffer, as so often happens. Nickolas Gustavson was a Swede who had just arrived in this country and knew little English, "Get inside!" one of the men yelled; Gustavson shook his head to show he didn't understand, and started on down the street. It was a fatal decision, for he was shot and killed.

Another unexpected element entered. A young medical student at the University of Michigan was home for a vacation. His father had a drugstore and the young student was sitting idly in front of it, thinking of nothing in particular. But all of a sudden he discovered he had a great deal to think of. He knew that in the Hotel Dampier he could find a gun, and in a moment he was on the second floor of the hotel, a carbine in his hands.

But this was not all the unfortunate luck that was befalling the visitors. At exactly the wrong time another hardware merchant came along. Northfield, it seems, being supplied to the hilt with hardware stores. This hardware merchant rushed back to his own store and got a breechloading rifle.

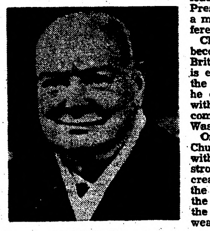
Churchill Wins British Election; Civilian Group Proposes UMT Plan

CHURCHILL—For the second time in his life Winston Churchill has become Prime Minister of Great Britain. As a result, many U. S. officials are predicting closer Anglo-American relations than existed under the Labor government of Clement Attlee.

Churchill's election, however, gains importance from the home towners point of view for a number of possible conflicts in Anglo-American relations that may result and not from possible closer ties. Britain's new Prime Minister has long wanted a meeting of top western leaders with Premier Stalin, but President Truman has opposed such a move ever since the Potsdam conference in 1945.



CHURCHILL

The winner and new Prime Minister who said during World War II, "I did not become Prime Minister to liquidate the British empire."

Churchill, who once said he did not become Prime Minister of Great Britain to see the empire dissolved, is expected to take a firm stand on the Suez and Sudan problem. In fact, he could defend the empire system with such tenacity that it could become a point of conflict between Washington and London.

On the other side of the ledger, Churchill is believed in full harmony with the U. S. policy in Europe—a strong joint defense, constantly increasing economic and political unity, the close association of Britain with the European continent as well as the United States and the Commonwealth.

UMT PROGRAM—The National Security Training Commission, a five-man civilian group formed last June after congress had approved the broad idea of universal military training, has made a report to congress that will reach into every home and family in the nation.

Briefly, the commission has recommended a UMT program that could involve 800,000 youths annually and cost more than $4 billion in the first year. Every youth upon reaching 18 would get six months of training, then for the next seven and a half years be in a reserve component if the plan was put in operation.

The commission had this to say about world conditions and the future: "The clear prospect is that the present generation must live in danger for many years" and therefore should "learn to live with danger calmly and confidently".

Because today's military technology permits an enemy to strike directly at the United States by sea or air, "the American people must be prepared, like their forebearers who pushed the frontier westward, to meet a savage and deadly attack at any moment."

KOREA—Peace talks are underway again in Korea and rumors circulate that this time they will not collapse. However, the man on Main Street still has the feeling that you can't do business with the Communists and expect little of the negotiations.

Politely, but firmly, United Nations representatives have told the Communists they refuse to swap hard-won ground for peace in Korea. The Reds insist on a buffer zone 15 miles wide along the 38th parallel.

The possibility remains that the Allies may make minor adjustments in the present battle line that would be acceptable to the Communists. An unusual note was sounded when Communist correspondents, who usually have little to say to UN correspondents, expressed optimism: "I feel certain a few miles are not going to hold up an agreement," one is reported to have said.

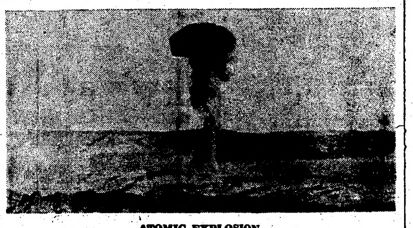
POLITICS—Frank E. McKinney, Indianapolis businessman, was scheduled for the job of Democratic national chairman, replacing William M. Boyle, Jr., who recently resigned while under fire by senate investigators.

McKinney reported he had "agreed to accept" the $35,000-a-year job and would dispose of his interests in a pipeline company which is seeking a government certificate to get 100,000 tons of scarce steel. He will retain his radio and banking interests.

In his announcement that he had agreed to accept the job, McKinney said: "I'll state here and now that so long as I am national chairman, no company which I am affiliated with or interested in will ever enter the doors of a government bureau or agency seeking favors or considerations of any type or character."

IRAN CRISIS—Rumors persisted during recent days that an agreement in the British-Iranian oil dispute was near, with the United States playing an important part in the negotiations.

It was rumored the agreement would provide: (1) British marketing of Iranian oil, which would be purchased at an agreed wholesale rate and sold in consumer areas at prices sufficient to assure Britain of a reasonable profit: (2) Compensation for British properties already seized by Iranians: (3) An agreement to assure success of Iranian production, probably providing for a "neutral" manager under Iranian government control.



ATOMIC EXPLOSION

The typical column and mushroom of an atomic bomb explosion rises high above earth at Nevada test site, some 65 miles northwest of Las Vegas, Nev. This shot was made from a point on Mt. Charleston 40 miles away.

FARM ACCIDENTS—The corn harvest is in full swing in the midwest and the farm accident rate will climb accordingly. Last year in Nebraska, for instance, the cornpicker toll was two lives, 194 fingers, 18 hands, 10 arms, one leg, four toes and two feet.

The National Safety Council estimated that farm accident deaths are being recorded at the rate of 48 a day, or 17,520 a year; disabling injuries now total 1,500,000 a year. The economic loss caused by farm accidents is estimated at $1 billion a year.

BIGGER CROPS—Although the government will not publish their production guides for 1952 until mid-December, agriculture experts predict the government will ask for bigger crops. The big push will probably be for higher yields per acre, rather than greater acreage.

The simple reason for the expected production increase is the upsurge in the number of people to feed and clothe. Since the 151 million U. S. nose-count of early 1950, census officials figure there's been a 4 million increase.

CHEAPER PORK

Record Hog Crop Indicates Cheap Pork

The greatest number of hogs to be marketed in seven years will flood livestock centers in the next few months and will result in a big drop in pork prices across the retail counter, producers report.

This year's pig crop of almost 106 million head is the largest for any year in "peace-time" and is second only to 1943's staggering record of 121 million.

The increasing number of animals going to market has alread caused a considerable price slid In July hogs were bringing $23.95 hundred pounds at the Chica market. Last month the price w down to $19.75. One official of a b packing firm predicts that pric may slide to $17 or $18 per hundr by the middle of November or ea December.

World's Biggest Tree

While California's Big Trees (Sequoia gigantea) have no peer as a species either in bulk or age, there is a single tree that outranks even the biggest sequoia in diameter and may surpass it in age.

The botannical colossus is the Tule cypress of Santa Maria del Tule, six miles from Oaxaca in southern Mexico. It is a Taxiodium mucronatum, the same cypress as those in Chapultepec Park in Mexico City. Thousands of years old, yet still green and vigorous, the Tule tree's plump, rounded shape suggests an old oak rather than the usual slim cypress. "El Tule," as it is called, is so massive that 28 people, touching fingertips of outstretched arms, barely can encircle it.

Bullets and Bolos

Mount Bangbanglan is an 8,000-foot peak guarding "No Man's Land" between the domains of the Kalingas, Tingians, Ifugaos and Bontoc Igorot tribes of northern Luzon. As tribal war flared recently on its forest-covered slopes, gunfire made Mount Bangbanglan's Malayan name ring true. Tattooed warriors found bullets better than bolos.

Santos, Brazilian Port

Santos, Atlantic coast port for Sao Paulo, was founded in 1543. In the downtown section of the Brazilian port narrow streets typical of a colonial city predominate, giving a picturesque air to this seaport. Air travel has brought Santos, which is also a seaside resort, within easy reach of North Americans.

SIMPLIFY THANKSGIVING

IT'S just an old American custom, this Thanksgiving ritual, but it's one to be proud of. So long may it endure! And don't let any modern dietitian talk you into substituting baked fish for stuffed turkey, or fruit souffles for pumpkin pies. Serve a one-hundred-percent Thanksgiving dinner, but select foods which can be used also for a later buffet supper.

For no matter how adequate the dinner, there's going to be a supper. You know that. You know that along late in the evening, memories of that tender, savory turkey and that mellow, spicy pumpkin pie are going to lead thankful folks toward the refrigerator—for just a bite more.

Ways and Means

If you have simplified your menu so that one cooking will serve both meals—the dinner and the buffet supper—then instead of being the harried hostess you can be your own guest for supper. You can linger by the flickering candlelight over good food and good talk, linking up memories of other happy Thanksgivings with these fleeting ones, and you can be truly thankful.

Let's get down to ways and means. There'll be turkey of course. Then order a turkey that is sufficiently large so that you will have two cups of diced cold turkey left over to make a delicious turkey and rice casserole as the main dish for your buffet supper.

There will be celery also to add to the turkey dressing. Reserve the celery hearts to use as one of the appetizers for the evening buffet.

There are many salads that can be tossed together with remnants of the Thanksgiving dinner, but perhaps you would like to make a gelatin salad a whole day before the holiday and put it in the refrigerator ready for Thanksgiving evening. A very delicious recipe for this sort of salad follows.

Preparedness Counts

Your tart shells for pumpkin tarts may be made a day in advance also. Then when you make your pumpkin filling for the dinner pie, make sufficient to fill the tart shells for the buffet dessert. The following recipes serve eight persons:

Celery Hearts
Watermelon Pickles
Turkey and Rice Casserole
Golden Harvest Salad
Buttered Finger Rolls
Jellied Pumpkin Tarts
Coffee, Cider or Hot Chocolate

Turkey and Rice Casserole: Put alternate layers of rice, turkey and ham in a casserole, starting and ending with rice. Use three cups of hot boiled rice, two cups of diced cold turkey and one-half cup of diced cold ham. Dust the layers lightly with salt and pepper. Pour over the contents of one 1-pound can of cream of mushroom soup, and cover with buttered crumbs. Heat until well browned in a hot oven. This makes liberal servings for eight.

Golden Harvest Salad: Soften one tablespoon of gelatin in four tablespoons of cold water. Dissolve with one-third cup of sugar in one and two-thirds cups of boiling water. Add one-fourth cup vinegar, three-fourths teaspoon salt and cool until it becomes as thick as honey. Then add the contents of one 11-ounce can of diced carrots, one-half cup diced cucumbers and two tablespoons diced green peppers. Turn into eight individual wet molds and chill. Serve on crisp lettuce hearts and garnish with mayonnaise. Or you may serve on the same plate with the turkey casserole.

Raising Turkeys

Turkeys and chickens should be kept in separate quarters, a good distant apart, if possible. Chickens may carry certain diseases and transmit them to turkeys, even when the chickens are not visibly affected. If turkeys are weak or droopy, develop running noses or other signs of poor health, obtain veterinary diagnosis at once.

Step Up Penicillin 'Crops'

Production of penicillin "crops" can be stepped up through X-ray treatment of the molds in a new process patented recently, according to National Patent Council. Doses of 50,000 to 150,000 roentgen units are applied to mold spores. Though most of the spores are killed, those remaining are newly induced, mutated strains which produce larger "crops."

SON OF A MINER, Emil Zontelli is today an independent iron ore producer—president and part owner of the Zontelli Brothers Company of Ironton, Minn. Here you see him at his concentrating plant on the Cuyuna Range. Mr. Zontelli got started in Minnesota in the moving and haulage business, using horses and wagons to deliver coal to iron mines. In 1936, with his brother Jack, he began handling mine excavation jobs under contract . . . went into actual mining on his own six years ago. Today the family-owned Zontelli firm includes his brother Jack and his sister Ann.

Self-made Minnesotans make iron ore

Starting on a shoestring, he has become an important ore producer. The Minnesota concentrating plant he runs turns low-grade ore, once considered worthless because of low iron content, into first-rate ore urgently needed by the nation. By making use of it, Mr. Zontelli is practicing real conservation—helping to lengthen the life of better ores. At the same time, he's providing jobs and doing business with quite a few Minnesota industries.

Up The Ladder

It's good to know that Minnesota's Ranges have other "Zontellis"—other men who, starting from scratch, today own and operate impressive processing plants that "manufacture" iron ore.

Right now, for example, 12 of the 58 concentrating plants in the state are owned and operated by just such small producers.

Produce Ore, Jobs, Business

The output of these operators bulks bigger than you might suppose. Last year, for example, they contributed about 3 million tons of ore to Minnesota's output.

But iron ore isn't all these operators produce—they also produce good jobs and good business important to all Minnesota. Since 1945, for instance, five of them have paid their employees around $5¼ million in wages and salaries. In the same period, they've bought some $5 million worth of supplies, mostly from Minnesota firms.

More Opportunities Ahead?

Few Minnesotans have known the vital role of the small ore producer in the state's big mining industry. The truth is, there are many opportunities here for both individuals and small firms to make good . . . and the bigger firms welcome, encourage and work closely with them.

There can be still more opportunities up in iron country if Minnesota, through fair tax treatment, helps the mining industry expand its operations. And that will be good, not for the Range area alone, but for all the state.

Myron Kolden has Highest Award

Myron Kolden of Middle River was presented the highest award a Boy Scout can receive on Saturday, the Gold Life-saving Medal of the Boy Scouts. The award was presented by Gov. Elmer C. Anderson who made the trip to Middle River for that purpose.

Kenton Smith and Delray Christianson were among the boys who were invested as Tenderfoot Scouts that evening.

Myron, then 12 years old, and a younger brother were crossing the swollen Middle River on a footbridge, April 30, 1950, when his brother fell into the stream. Myron plunged into the stream with his clothes on and, at the great risk of his own life, grasped his brother by one arm and swam to safety.

Myron is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Lester Kolden and a nephew of Mrs. B. Borg.

Willis Sorum returned home last week from New Jersey. Having entered the army a year ago and having been in the armed services twice before, he was eligible for discharge.

Our County Nurse Says

Certain specific reactions may be expected from the immunizations given at the school Wed.

The smallpox "Take" which occurs if the child has never been vaccinated or holds no immunity, begins as a blister on the left arm obout the fourth day after vaccination. About the 7th day this blister fills with pus. Between the 7th to 10th day the blister breaks and forms a black scab which falls off about the 14th day. This reaction may vary a few days.

Do NOT apply ANY dressing or bandage to the arm.

The 6th or 7th day the child may become feverish. His arm may become sore, and he may have some swelling under the arm. This is normal. Give the child plenty of water or other fluids and encourage extra rest.

If the child has been vaccinated before and retains his immunity he will have negative reaction. This manifests itself as a raised, red, bump which may itch, occuring about the second day after vaccination.

If nothing happens on the arm the child should be revaccinated.

The diptheria-tetanus inoculation, which is given in the right arm, may cause some soreness and fever within the first 24 hours. If the child is feverish he should be put to bed and given plenty of fluids.

The child may develop a bump at the site of the injection. This may persist two or three months. This is a normal reaction as the material given is not designed to be absorbed immediately.

Since the diphtheria-tetenus immunization is given as an inoculation not all children will have a reaction. They will be protected, however, regardless of whether or not they have a reaction.

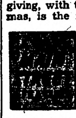
Thanksgiving Is a Family Day Dedicated to Giving Thanks

Thanksgiving is a family day, dedicated to giving thanks and feasting. And most home town families who make their living directly or indirectly from the soil have reason to be thankful, because this has been a bountiful year with few exceptions.

Although not a record, the 1951 harvest is well above average. The number of cattle and swine on American farms are near the all-time record. And turkeys, synonymous with Thanksgiving, are in greater number than at any time in history.



During the last two weeks the local homemaker has noticed a heavier percentage of advertising in the home town publication than before, especially from grocery stores and poultry dealers. This is to be expected, because Thanksgiving, with the exception of Christmas, is the food industry's busiest and most profitable period of the entire year.

The profits, of course, are from volume. The average housewife during the past year has had to watch her food budget with great care, and in many cases has taken to hunting for food bargains. For that reason, the local grocer who has a savings to offer the women of his community can expect them to take advantage of it. But not unless his advertising tells them about it.

Generally, local grocery and poultry business has been exceptionally good during the past week. It even appears likely the food industry may set a new all-time seasonal record because on Thanksgiving the homemakers are inclined to overdo it a little and serve two kinds of potatoes, a host of vegetables and several desserts, and of course, the traditional turkey or a duck.

Since the turkey is usually the most important item on the Thanksgiving menu, preparation of the bird is the homemakers first concern. The real secret in roasting the turkey is keeping the temperature as low as possible. As for preparation, here are eight simple steps that should insure outstanding success:

1. The turkey should be seasoned inside with salt before it is stuffed. (Approximately ⅛ teaspoon per pound of bird.) If giblets or other meats are added to the stuffing, cook them first. Don't pack the body cavity and neck region with dressing because it will expand. Allow room for expanding.

2. The body cavity should be shut. A good method is by metal skewers, laced together with strong cord. Some homemakers prefer to sew the cavity, using needle and cord. In either case leave long ends to the cord for tying the legs.

3. Wind the cord ends around the leg, above the joint and over the skin so it won't draw, and bring the legs together and tie them to the tailpiece until the leg ends are directly over the tail.

4. A long piece of the neck skin should be pulled over the back of the bird and fastened with a skewer or a few stitches.

5. Force the wing tips back until they rest flat against the neck skin, but don't try to secure them with a string across the breast, because that leaves markings on the surface.

6. Place the bird breast down, or on its side. Grease thoroughly, using unsalted, melted fat.

7. Cover the turkey with a thin open-textured cloth dipped in unsalted melted fat and place in preheated oven. If cloth dries during cooking, moisten with fat from bottom of pan.

8. After an hour, cut trussing string between drumsticks and tail and turn turkey to rest on other side of breast. When baking time is approximately ¾ done, turn turkey on back to finish browning.

Properly done, trussing produces a bird of compact shape that won't dry out. The turkey will be more attractive on the platter and will be easier to carve.

FORT STEVENS

Few Washingtonians Know Story Of Stockade in Center of City

WNU Washington Bureau

Thousands of motorists on Washington's busy Thirteenth street daily swerve around a rough stockade without ever realizing that these earthworks mark all that is left of the Civil War defense which saved the nation's capital from capture by a threatening Confederate army.

It was on this spot that President Lincoln stood and watched, as an eyewitness and a target, the only battle he ever saw. While he stood there, an officer fell with a death wound within three feet of him. The President was finally convinced by his officers that he was running a needless risk and was persuaded to get below the danger line.

General Jubal Early directed his attack against this fortification on July 11 and 12, 1864, saw it weakly manned and gave the order to fire. At the beginning of the battle, however, Union reinforcements, under the command of General Lew Wallace, who later wrote the famous book Ben Hur, relieved the fort and caused the Confederates to abandon their attempt against Washington.

In their march to Washington, Early's men had collected $20,000 from Hagerstown and $200,000 cash from the banks in Frederick, Maryland. It was only recently that the city of Frederick was able to pay off in full the notes given to reimburse the banks for this sum. Early's troops had torn up twenty-four miles of Baltimore and Ohio railroad tracks, and had burned the home of Postmaster General Montgomery Blair in Silver Spring, Maryland, then probably ten miles out of the Washington city limits but today an integral part of the greater metropolitan area.

General Wallace's defeat at Monocracy had delayed Early's army by one day, and that one day's grace, giving an opportunity to get fresh reinforcements into the city, is considered by many historians to have saved Washington from capture. General Early left Washington by a night march on July 12 with no one making a move to stop him. So the possibility of the Confederate flag flying over the capitol dome was lost.

Fort Stevens was constructed in August of 1861 on a site just off what was then called the Seventh Street road but what is now Georgia Avenue. It was originally named Fort Massachusetts, but was enlarged and renamed in 1863. In 1937 the fort was partially restored and is now under the care of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission. It occupies a block in a now fully developed part of the city. Mounds of earth are stacked against huge bullet-shaped wooden poles on the outer edges of the fort. In the center stands a flag pole that was never graced by a Confederate flag.

The fort is surrounded by churches, apartment buildings, and other evidences of modern urban life. Automobiles speed by. In the midst of all this, Fort Stevens stands apart, a quiet reminder of another age, another monument here of the war between the states, and a silent reminder of how near was the Confederate cause to the capture of Washington.

HOMER CROY'S
Jesse James
WAS MY NEIGHBOR

THE STORY SO FAR: As Jesse James and the band of which he has become the leader move into their second decade of banditry, they find they have to move farther afield to find lucrative prospects for robbery. One of the gang suggests Minnesota as a likely spot, so they all move north in that direction. Their primary target is the bank at Mankato, Minnesota, but that job proves impossible to bring off. They move on to Northfield, a prosperous College town. There disaster strikes the band in the middle of their job. Citizens of the town discover that the bank is being robbed and rush for their guns, determined to catch or kill the daring bandits.

CHAPTER IX

And now one medical student and two hardware merchants were out to do all the damage they could.

Nor was this all. Three of the good citizens began to throw rocks. They might as well have thrown corncobs. Not a single robber was hit; one horse had his hip skinned.

But what was going on inside the bank? As soon as the acting bookkeeper saw that the three men who entered were robbers, he got down on his knees and began to pray for deliverance. The cashier himself was at the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia, the most fortunate trip he ever took. His substitute stepped forward.

"Are you the cashier?" one of the robbers asked.

"No."

Which was strictly true.

The robber then pointed his gun at the bookkeeper and said, "Are you the cashier?"

"No."

The same question was asked of the assistant bookkeeper, who gave the same answer.

The robbers seemed beaten. But not quite. One of them turned back to the first man they had addressed, Joseph Lee Heywood, and said, "I know you are the cashier. Open that safe."

"The lock is set and it can't be opened now."

This was only half-true, for the safe was actually unlocked; the door happened to be closed and the bolts were in place, but the combination dial had not been turned. The door could have been pulled open.

Men Inside the Bank In Desperate Spot

The safe itself was in a vault which was large enough for a person to enter. And this Charlie Pitts tried to do. Heywood, thinking he saw an opportunity, dashed forward and tried to slam the door, hoping to entrap the robber. The other two bandits grabbed the cashier and pulled him back, again insisting that he open the safe. Once more he refused, which was a foolish thing to do. "Robbers! Robbers!" he shouted, very foolish.

One of the men struck out with his revolver, knocking the brave but shallow-thinking cashier to the floor. Charlie Pitts fired, not to kill him but to frighten him. The bullet entered the vault and went through a tin box containing papers and jewelry left there by a customer for safekeeping.

The third man in the bank, A. E. Bunker, tried to dash out; he went through the directors' room to the rear door of the bank and through that, too, taking the blinds with him. Charlie Pitts followed his flight with two pistol balls, one of them going through his collarbone but not killing him.

The three robbers in the bank knew that things were growing desperate, for they could hear the shooting outside. Worse than that, they heard one of their gang shout, "Come on out, boys. They're killing our men."

And at this crucial moment occurred the cruelest and most foul deed ever perpetrated by Jesse James. The brave and foolish cashier was on the floor, trying to get up, blood running down his face from the pistol-butt blow. Then and there the frustrated Jesse shot him dead.

A great deal was happening on the street. Bullets were still flying through the air, rocks too. And two of the outlaws lay dead: Bill Chadwell and Clell Miller. In addition, Bob Younger had been shot in the elbow, the bullet shattering the bone. But he was cool; in fact, they all were, except Jesse, who had shot in anger. Bob Younger transferred his pistol to his left hand and continued to fire. He had no horse to ride, his own had been killed. "Get on behind me," yelled Cole, and that is what Bob did, the enraged citizens popping away at them all the while.

The outlaws set out on the kind of flight they knew so well. But now it was a bit different; six men were on five horses, and one of the men wounded. Not good.

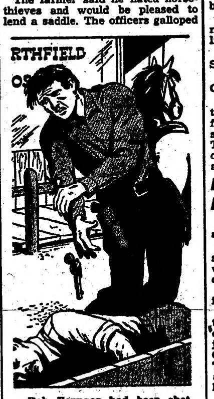
The initial pursuit amounted to nothing. Two Northfield men caught the horses of the dead bandits and mounted them. The horses, eager to join their companions, flew down the street. Then the Northfield men thought it over; maybe the idea wasn't so good after all, two chasing six of the most desperate men in America. They decided to go back and get reinforcements.

Word was telegraphed to St. Paul and Minneapolis; soon the whole state was aroused. The towns began to organize posses; every hour the scope of the manhunt widened.

The first thing, for the bandits, was to get Bob Younger off Cole's horse. They met a farmer jogging down the road with a team; before he knew what was happening, he had a one-horse team.

They rode on till they came to a farmhouse. They explained to the farmer that they were officers of the law chasing horse-thieves, and could they borrow a saddle for one of their men who had joined so hastily he hadn't had time to get a saddle?

The farmer said he hated horse-thieves and would be pleased to lend a saddle. The officers galloped away hot on the trail, the farmer smiling with satisfaction at the helpful contribution he had made.



Bob Younger had been shot in the elbow, the bullet shattering the bone, But he was cool.

But Bob Younger's farm horse was all feet, and fell, pitching Bob over its head and painfully jolting his arm. The fall broke the saddle-girth, and, to make matters worse, the horse galloped away, leaving Bob exactly where he was when he started. Up again behind Cole.

Soon they came to another farmhouse where they used the horse-thieves story successfully again and got a new mount. But this animal balked; with all his spurring, Bob could not move him. Up again behind Cole.

The Horses Exhausted, They Travel on Foot

Fresh horses; They must have them. They found a farmer and traded with him, leaving two and taking two. By luck they were able to capture a horse in pasture, and with it pressed on as best they could. They took the blankets off their mounts, spread them over bushes in a kind of tent, and tried to get some rest. The dismal rain continued. Instead of getting better, conditions grew worse. Bob Younger's arm was now inflamed.

They held counsel and decided to do something they had never done since the gang had come into being—travel by foot. Leaving their horses tied, so as not to inform on them, the six started through the almost impassable swamp. But it was too dangerous to travel by day, so, after going a short distance, they waited on a fairly dry spot until night, then started to wade. The next morning a piece of good luck befell them. They found an old abandoned house and thankfully fell on its floor. Here they remained two days, while food became more and more of a problem. They couldn't go and get a farmer's wife to cook dinner for them. They saw rabbits but didn't dare shoot.

Five days had passed. Now there were nine hundred man-hunters on their trail, and they were only fifty miles from where they had started.

The courage of the outlaws was almost unbelievable. Nothing was so heartbreaking, utterly discouraging, that they did not continue to try. Another piece of bad luck occurred: the horses they had left tied broke away and were come upon by one of the posses. This changed everything. Instead of looking for men on horseback, the word went out to search for men on foot.

It became apparent the bandits would have to do what they usually did when the law was upon them—split up. When the pinch came, Jesse and Frank always stuck together. Cole, Bob Younger, Jim Younger, and Charlie Pitts went one way and Jesse and Frank another. It was not long before the latter two had a piece of good luck, or so it seemed. They found a horse and Frank was helped up on it; he had been wounded in the right leg at Northfield.

Suddenly, in the night, they heard a terrifying sound—the challenge of a picket. "Halt! Who goes there?"

Instantly Frank spurred the animal. Instantly, too, the picket shot. Off went Jesse's hat; when it was picked up the next morning there was a bullet hole in it. It had been that close.

Worse luck, the horse got away.

Jesse and Frank started to plod on again.

The three Youngers and Charlie Pitts were desperately plodding on, Bob Younger's arm even more inflamed. In the early morning they came upon a Norwegian farmer industriously milking away. They spoke to him and successfully passed on. But the farmer had a seventeen-year-old son. No one yet has ever been able to dodge the curiosity of a seventeen-year-old boy.

"Pa," said the boy, after the men were out of hearing, "I believe that was the robbers."

The boy's name was Axel Oscar Sorbel.

"You go on with your milking, Oscar," said the father.

After the milking was finished, the boy discovered, at the house from his mother, that the men had stopped there and tried to buy food. They were hunters, they said; one of them had been wounded in an accident.

Boy Is Instrumental In Capturing Youngers

"Pa, I'm going in and tell the authorities," said the boy.

"You eat your breakfast, Oscar," said the father. "Why do you always try to think up ways to get out of work?"

But the boy did ride in—and rode into fame in bandit history.

It was about eight miles to the town of Madelia, where Cole Younger and Charlie Pitts had registered just a few unworried days before. Oscar Sorbel was there in no time. The first place he saw anybody was at the Flanders House, and there he drew up.

"I've found the bandits!" he gasped.

"What did you do with them, son?" asked Landlord Vought.

"Well," said the boy, a bit put back, "they're still there. They're four of them."

"That's a big haul. Have you had breakfast?"

But the boy was so confident—so sure of what he had seen—that Vought began to believe him. At this moment James Glispin, the sheriff of the county, arrived, and he too became convinced. A body of Madelia citizens was made up, mounted, and started for the Sorbel place.

The robbers, not realizing that fate was closing in, pushed on, without anything to eat, into an almost impenetrable morass known as Hanska Slough. Cole, who had also been wounded, limped along on a staff. Bob Younger, his arm in a crude sling, plodded behind him. They were all dirty and disheveled and weak from hunger and fatigue.

The pursuers, knowing shortcuts and dry paths, followed their sorry trail. At last they caught sight of the bandits, who had sunk down on a dry summock to rest.

"Surrender!" shouted the sheriff.

The bandits struggled on.

The sheriff gave word to his men to fire. A bullet struck Cole Younger's staff, knocking it out of his hand.

The bandits turned and fired feebly. They had seen some horses hitched to a wagon. They started to run toward them. But just at this moment a farmer came up.

"We want those horses," shouted Charlie Pitts. "We're officers after the Northfield bank robbers."

The farmer leaped into the wagon and whipped his team in the opposite direction.

The outlaws waded across a murky stream and saw something on the public road they could hardly believe: two teams—four horses—jogging serenely along. They started to run toward them.

But the drivers bent over and each picked up a shotgun. They were going duck hunting.

Had ill fate ever pursued four men so faithfully? With groans of despair they turned back into the tankled morass of the slough.

Thomas L. Vought and the sheriff and their manhunters came toward the outlaws. Slowly they advanced, firing from time to time. The bandits, rearing themselves from the mud and water, fired back. The men of law and order came relentlessly on.

The end was inevitable. Charlie Pitts was killed.

And now the three Youngers were alone.

The end soon became inevitable for them, too.

Bob Younger got slowly up from the ground, his wounded arm in its muddy sling.

"All our men are down but me. I'll surrender."

It was soon over. It was found that Charlie Pitts had five bullets in him.

In addition to the wounded arm, Bob Younger had a bullet in his breast.

Jim Younger had five wounds.

Cole Younger had eleven. He got unsteadily to his feet—and saw something that made him gape. It was his landlord from the Flanders House!

Greenland's Iceberg Export Drops Behind

Greenland's largest export, icebergs, hit a new low this year when, of an output estimated at 10,000 to 15,000 bergs, none succeeded in reaching the crowded shipping lanes between North America and Europe.

The largest Arctic icebergs take off from the continually advancing glaciers and icecap fringe of Greenland's west coasts, says the national geographic society. In an average year about 400 of the total production survive an 1,800-mile southward drift before disintegrating in the warm Gulf Stream. This year no icebergs were reported below the 46th parallel along the southern tip of Newfoundland.

Moving south through Baffin Bay and Davis Strait to Labrador, many of the crystal "castles" and plain "flattops" jam against the coast or are caught in the natural traps of islands and bays. A few swing into the Labrador current and continue southward. Some drift toward Belle Isle Straight and some move around Newfoundland by way of Grand Banks to invade main traffic arteries and threaten shipping.

Major Arctic icebergs are produced by about 18 "name" glaciers. The Humboldt, near Thule, north of Cape York, is one that supplies outsize models. Mountains of ice a mile across and rising 200 feet above water have been reported, but the largest are puny compared to the 20-mile-long bergs sighted by Australian air reconnaissance in the Antarctic in 1948.

An immigrant who had recently become a naturalized citizen was applauding a contingent of Loyalty Day paraders in New York City. A man standing in front of him turned and with a superior attitude demanded to know why he was applauding.

The Russian-born citizen replied, "I am applauding good people who are affirming their faith in democracy."

"And if you don't like it," he suggested, "why don't you go back to where I came from."

A THANKSGIVING FEAST

So long as harvests heap their bounties into baskets, so long as pumpkins turn golden on the vine, so long as turkeys strut their stuff and we prize our Pilgrim heritage, there will always be a Thanksgiving feast. There will be the traditional roast fowl with stuffing, savory sauces, harvest fruits in delicious combination, and puddings and pies festively rich far beyond the aspirations of puddings and pies for any other dinner of the year.

The table remains much the same from one Thanksgiving to another—but how strikingly different our modern kitchen looks from that of our grandmother's on Thanksgiving morning! Were the housewife of two generations ago a guest at our annual feast this year, she would stare at our kitchen in amazement, doubting there was to be any feast at all!

Modern Days and Simple Ways

For the modern feast is becoming more and more simple to prepare, and there are countless conveniences which make it possible to prepare much of it in advance. Thus the modern housewife, who is serving a dinner at one o'clock, can be prettily gowned, ready to receive and enjoy her guests even though they arrive informally before the noon hour. Her mind is already at rest as to the ultimate success of her dinner, and the last-minute touches can be done with ease.

Now for a peek into the modern kitchen. At twelve o'clock the only real sign of cooking is the turkey roasting golden-brown in the oven. Canapés have been prepared early in the morning ready for last minute browning in the oven. Sweet potatoes have been cooked the day before and are now already stuffed in orange cups waiting for their final few moments of browning. The consommé, cooked earlier, is ready for a few moments' simmering before serving. The refrigerator contains canned pears which have been pickled and chilled to be served with cheese balls, also ready for a final tossing into a crisp, delectable salad. The whipped cream on the refrigerator shelf will be the final touch to that delicious squash pie which was baked a whole day in advance.

Is it any wonder, then, that the modern Thanksgiving hostess is as carefree and gay as her guests as she announces dinner? Here is her menu—the recipes are tested and designed to serve eight persons:

Hot Pimiento Canapés
Olives Consommé Julienne
Mixed Pickles
Roast Turkey Oyster Stuffing
Giblet Gravy
Mashed Potatoes
Creamed Cauliflower
Sweet Potatoes in Orange Cups
Frozen Cranberries
Pickled Pear and Cheese Salad
Squash Pie With Honey and Whipped Cream
Camembert Cheese with Crackers
Spiced Nuts
Coffee

Tested Recipes

Hot Pimiento Canapés: Prepare as many toast circles as there are guests. Spread with butter and then a layer of mayonnaise. Cut circles of canned pimiento the same size as the toast circles and place one on each. Sprinkle generously with grated cheese and a few grains of salt, and press a whole stuffed olive in the center of each. Place under the broiler flame until the cheese melts and browns slightly. Serve at once with parsley garnish.

Consommé Julienne: Cut one-half cup of raw carrot and one-fourth cup of celery in match-like strips, and cut one-fourth cup of canned stringless beans in lengthwise shreds about an inch and a half long. Melt one tablespoon of butter in a pan, add the vegetables and cook slowly until the vegetables are slightly brown. Add the contents of four No. cans of consommé, and simmer until the vegetables are tender. Season to taste. Serve in bouillon cups with a few vegetables in each.

Sweet Potatoes in Orange Cups: Beat three cups of hot mashed sweet potatoes with one-fourth cup of butter, one teaspoon salt, one and one-half tablespoons sugar and three-fourths cup of crushed pineapple until the mixture is light and fluffy. Cut four oranges in halves, remove the pulp carefully (reserving it for salad, fruit cups or breakfast fruit) and pile the potato mixture lightly in the orange shells. Sprinkle one-third cup of chopped salted peanuts on top and brown in a hot oven.

Squash Pie with Honey and Whipped Cream: To one-half of a No. 3 can of squash (or two cupfuls) add one and one-half cups of thin cream or milk, three-fourths cup of sugar which has been mixed with three-fourths teaspoon ginger, one-half teaspoon nutmeg, one-half teaspoon cinnamon and one teaspoon salt. Then add three eggs which have been beaten not too light. Pour into the crust and bake like a custard pie, having the oven hot at first, and then reduce (450 degrees for ten minutes, 325 degrees for thirty minutes, or until the filling is set and a knife comes out clean). Cool. Spread a layer of honey over the top, cover with unsweetened whipped cream, and serve.

AMERICAN THANKSGIVING

"Heap high the board with plenteous cheer and gather to the feast.
And toast the sturdy Pilgrim band, whose courage never ceased."
Alice Williams Brotherton
"The First Thanksgiving"

Here in America, Thanksgiving is a happy day. We feast and rejoice because we are thankful . . . we live in a complicated, atomic age, but like the humble Pilgrims, ours is a simple offering of thanks . . . for our health, for our abundance of natural wealth of soil and industry, and especially for our American heritage of personal freedom.

But the game came upon them unawares, and they, scampering away, climbed trees, all save one, who, seizing the animal by the ears, undertook to hold him. After holding him for some time and finding his strength giving way, he cried out to his companions in the trees:

Reds Reject President Truman's 'Foolproof' Disarmament Program

DISARMAMENT—No one who heard President Truman's "foolproof" disarmament plan and his blunt statement that "if we can't get security and peace one way, we must get it the other way", really expected the Russians to accept it. The Soviet's immediate "no", therefore, had no element of surprise.

What, then, it might well be asked, does the U. S. expect to gain by continually seeking disarmament when everyone knows the Soviet has no intention of participating?

President Truman as he appeared as he left on a five-week vacation after proposing a "foolproof" disarmament plan to the world.

There are several reasons, but two stand out. In the first place, there is always an outside chance that the Russians might change their minds and some method of disarmament worked out. But more immediate is the "propaganda" benefits the U. S. realizes by putting forth a definite plan, while the Russians have nothing to offer but their continued talk of wanting peace. By turning the plan down Russia has become branded in the eyes of the world.

The President's speech was broadcast to the world, and especially to those nations behind the iron curtain by the Voice of America. The main points of the plan:

1. An inventory of armies and armament all over the world, including eventual disclosure of information about atomic weapons—the number of which is presently top secret in both America and Russia. This inventory would develop into a permanent international inspection system.

2. The negotiation of specific arrangements for reducing armed strength and determining the size and composition of forces which each nation should have. Ultimately atomic weapons would be prohibited.

3. Actually putting the reductions in effect "as soon as that can be done with full knowledge and fairness to all."

KOREA PEACE—Reports from Korea indicate U. N. and Communist negotiators are in almost complete agreement on a buffer zone, But the question of when to time the cease fire still separates the two on final agreement.

The Communists want the cease-fire line indicated and effective immediately. The U.N., however, insists that it become effective only after other matters are settled—such as exchange of prisoners—and an armistice is ready for signing. The Allies contend that a cease-fire now would prevent an armistice ever being reached because it would halt the shooting and thus relieve the Reds of any necessity of negotiating the other questions.

It would seem that the chasm of distrust that exists between the Communists and Allies is more likely to delay an armistice than the establishment of a cease fire line. The Allies continue to charge the Communists with stalling.

CHURCHILL—Prime Minister Winston Churchill was again in the news. In a London speech he expressed the opinion that neither Russia or the United States really wanted to fight and pointed out "it must not be forgotten that . . . we took peculiar risks in providing the principal atomic base for the U. S. in Eastern England . . . We have every need and every right to seek and receive the fullest consideration from Americans for our point of view."

A short time later it was announced that Churchill will visit Washington for talks with President Truman.

Some observers believe that the London speech was an indication of Churchill's mood and determination to have a greater say in the battle against Communism. He may even succeed in getting the President to agree to a meeting with Premier Stalin which Truman has not wanted. Churchill will also discuss the possibilities of a U.S. loan to relieve Britain's critical economic situation.

DEFENSE—There is a slight possibility the home town taxpayer may get some relief from high taxes next year. The possibility was brought about by an announcement by Defense department officials of a cut in the next military budget as much as $11,500,000,000 below this year's.

Officials said the leveling off in armament outlays earlier than expected is due to two reasons. One is that because of long "lead times" in the production of aircraft, tanks, ammunition and other "hardware" for the armed forces, funds already authorized cover much of the scheduled expansion. The other is a growing awareness among military men that unless military demands are regulated and spaced, a "breaking point" in the civilian economy might result in the loss of public support for the long-term preparedness program.

Since the start of the Korean conflict the Defense department has been given total spending authority totaling approximately $110,000,000,000.

RUSSIA—Most people in the home towns of the United States have no idea of real size of the Soviet Union. Last week Soviet population figures were released that will startle the average American.

The Russians report a total population of 207,000,000 and an annual rate of increase of 1½ per cent. In 1940, the Soviet population, including inhabitants of areas annexed during 1939 and 1940, was roughly 193,000,000 persons. The gain to 207,000,000 at present, despite the losses of World War II, implies an average annual population growth over the eleven years since 1940 of about 1,300,000.

If these figures are accurate, then the Soviet Union has roughly 50,000,000 more people than the United States.

LEGION—The American Legion will ask congress next year for an increase of at least 10 per cent in compensation rates for disabled veterans and the widows and orphans of veterans, Donald R. Wilson, new national commander, has announced.

Wilson said that the Legion recognized the fact that the national economy was undergoing severe strain and "we are aware of an unalterable obligation not to make any undue demands upon that economy". But there still exists, he said, inequalities that must be leveled.

He pointed to the recently 10 per cent pay increase congress voted to most Civil Service employees and said veterans' compensations should be increased likewise.

SCHOOL ENROLLMENT

NEA Reports School Enrollment Is Up

Elementary and secondary-school enrollment totaled 26,567,374 as of October, 1951, the National Education Association announced in its annual research report. The new figure is an increase of 800,000 over last year.

Dr. Frank W. Hubbard, the association's research director, termed the year of 1951-52 one of lag in school construction, teachers' salaries, supply of elementary-school teachers, and financial support, "as enrollments continue to increase steadily and the purchasing power of the dollar continues to decline."

Dr. Hubbard said the school problem was further complicated by "man-power conditions, the restraints upon construction through lack of steel.

HOMER CROY'S Jesse James WAS MY NEIGHBOR

THE STORY SO FAR:

Jesse, Frank, the Younger brothers and the rest of the boys set out to rob the bank at Northfield, Minnesota, but they are discovered by the townspeople. The alarm is given on the street, and inside the bank the bandits are having trouble. The bank personnel resist, and Jesse cold-bloodedly kills the cashier. Two of the outlaws, Bill Chadwell and Clell Miller, are killed. Bob Younger is wounded. The gang begins its flight from the enraged town. The entire countryside is aroused, and the gang decides to split up. Jesse and Frank go one way, the Younger brothers with Charlie Pitts another. Spotted by a boy, Oscar Sorbel, the Youngers finally are captured.

CHAPTER X

Weak from loss of blood as he was, Cole Younger still had command of himself. "Hello, Mr. Vought. I didn't expect to run across you out here."

Vought looked at the body on the ground. "Who is that."

"That's your other guest."

A farmer was summoned with his wagon. The corpse was lifted in, and the three men got in and sat on the floor. It was not long before Cole was back at the Flanders House, this time non-paying.

A doctor was called and the wounds of the three were dressed, and food was brought for the almost famished men. The word was flashed everywhere. Soon a Pinkerton detective arrived and saw members of the James-Younger gang for the first time. He wanted very much to see them, for he had been pursuing them six years. General Pope, who had said 'We'll soon have them,' came and looked, too.

Frank and Jesse James hadn't yet been captured. They would have them next.

Frank and Jesse pressed on in the general direction of Missouri, sometimes with good luck, sometimes with decidedly bad. They were in pursuit of the men who had robbed the Northfield bank, they said; sometimes they added that it was the James-Younger gang which had robbed the bank. They never made any pretense it was any other gang but the James-Youngers.

Jesse, Frank Finally Get Back to Missouri

There is no complete record of this saga of the saddle, but the following incidents will give an idea of how the men traveled and how they tried to solve their problems.

One morning a farmer named Rolph, living near Luverne, Minnesota, was out in the yard washing his face from a pan on a bench, when he heard a sound behind him. Two travelworn men were riding up. They called from their horses, "Can you give us breakfast?"

Mr. Rolph looked at them doubtfully.

"We're officers of the law," one of the men explained. "The James Boys have held up the bank at Northfield. We think they are in this section and we are riding to Sioux City to get help."

Mr. Rolph was glad to assist the law, and soon the men sat down.

One took out his pistol and laid it on the breakfast table. "I'll have it handy in case I see one of them," he explained.

At the end of breakfast each gave Mrs. Rolph a silver dollar.

"Don't say anything about us having been here," one of them cautioned. "We don't want them to find out about it."

Then the two officers rode away.

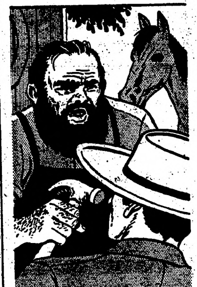
Nels A. Nelson of Valley Springs, South Dakota, was sitting by a well on his farm when two men approached and asked if they could get a drink. Nelson said yes. A pail of water was on the platform, and before Jesse could dismount the horse thrust its nose into the pail and began to drink. Nelson got the bucket away from the horse and said he would draw fresh water.

Jesse was moody and bitter and said broodingly, "I reckon I'd rather drink out of a pail used by a horse than by some men I know."

They crossed into Nebraska, but here their trail becomes dim and confused. Evidence would indicate that somewhere in Nebraska they disposed of their horses and came back to Missouri on the train. How confidently they had ridden north! And now how defeated they were. One wonders at their thoughts. Did Jesse consider giving up banditry, as he had so often? Did Frank want to settle down as a small-town politician, with horses of his own entered in the county fair races?

At last Jesse James reached home. By the extraordinary good luck that was so long his he was the only man in the Northfield robbery who was not dead, captured, or wounded. But everything else had gone wrong. Here at home people were still his friends, largely understanding and sympathetic friends; everywhere else, however, he was confronted by an outraged and furious Middle West. Too many innocent men dead. Robbing the local bank might be pardonable, but not shooting down one's neighbors. And, assisted by this wave of popular indignation, the detectives and the sheriffs were on his trail hotter than ever before. The Pinkertons, who had broken up the Reno gang, who had a long string of successes in the field behind them, were bound to get the James Boys. The best-trained and most relentless manhunters in America had a reputation to think about.

Jesse had one important protection. No sheriff or detective as yet had his picture. Never once did he try to disguise himself; he lived as much like the average person as he could. He rode trains freely; he went to county fairs and races. One might think that some of the people he had held up in banks, stages, on trains, on the road, would sooner or later encounter him and recognize him. But they didn't. Who knows, maybe he looked different viewed over a pistol barrel.



"A Carpetbagger, that's what you are. Get out of my shop." This to a man who had fought under Quantrill!

Where were the boys to go now and what were they to do? Examination of the available evidence shows that Zee James was living in Kansas City, and that there Jesse joined her. But Kansas City was only thirty-five miles from his birth-place. The Boys could not retreat to Paso Robles, for Uncle Drury James in 1868 had sold his interest in the ranch and hot springs. The best thing seemed to return to farming. But where? They could go to Kentucky: many relatives there, but also many people who knew them by sight. Finally they made an important decision: they would go to Tennessee, where no one knew them, where they would try to get land and start their lives anew.

Hounded by the Law, Boys Go to Tennessee

It has long been a mystery how they got there, and I take quite a bit of satisfaction in helping to clear this up. They decided to drive, so they obtained two covered wagons, hitched a span of horses to each, and started eastward overland, just as their father had once started west. And, like him, they started from Liberty. What a picture—the most famous bandits in the world decamping in covered wagons with their families.

Frank engaged Tyler Burns to drive his wagon and Jesse got his half-brother, John T Samuels, to drive his. The wives sat in the wagons, Zee holding little Jesse Junior, who was just two years old, while Jesse and Frank rode horseback. They would plod along with the wagons until they came to a town; this they would bypass, and join the wagons later. At night they camped together. Their movements attracted little attention, for everywhere people were on the go. It was a changing America and they were part of it.

When they reached Kentucky they felt they were out of danger, and the two drivers left them. In August of 1877 they reached Humphreys County, Tennessee, and came to the town of Waverly. There Jesse rented a farm from Banks Link. This farm has been in the same family for more than a hundred years. It is now the property of Hugh Link, grandson of the man who owned it when Jesse set down his plow. Water from the Tennessee Valley Authority now backs up to it. It is in a section known as 'Big Bottom;' and it was so known then.

Mr. Howard was a good farmer, according to the local stories; no one suspected his shocking past. But they did notice that, in addition to his farm horses, he had an excellent riding animal named 'Red Fox,' which he entered in the local races, always winning.

One of those who dropped in to the Link farm that Sunday afternoon was James Crockett, who had been Jesse's nearest neighbor; he was a boy, then, light of weight, and he was engaged to train Red Fox. "Jesse certainly knew horses," said Mr. Crockett reminiscently. Then, sitting in the very room where Jesse had lived, he told this story.

A township election was being held and the men met at a schoolhouse to cast their votes. Jesse could vote and he was there with his neighbors. It was a hot day, and suddenly that aggravating after-effect of his surrender wounds made itself felt, and he fainted.

The men opened his collar, threw back his coat—and got a shock, for under the coat was a shoulder holster. It seemed a trifle odd for a man to attend an election thus equipped, and especially odd for a farmer.

But the thing was to revive him. They threw water in his face; his mind went in and out, then suddenly he came to his senses. Instantly his hand whipped over.

"Where is it! Where is it!"

The holster had been placed on the schoolhouse steps; one of the men held it up. Jesse's hand weakly moved out and rested on it; then he swooned again.

After a time he came to completely, and, without a word of explanation, buckled on his holster. The thing was unusual but not enough to make people pay special attention. That is, until later . . . But it shows how deep in Jesse was the instinct for self-preservation. Even with his mind reeling it was the deepest thing for him.

Jesse Decides to Join Frank in Nashville

Jesse James — the most famous bandit in the world—had quietly farmed two years while, all over the country, detectives had been hard at work hunting him. During this period, as far as it is possible to tell, he had not even looked in the direction of a bank. Now he was on his way to Nashville to join his brother.

One thinks of his wife; in some ways she is the heroine of the story. After the years on the farm they were as poor as when they had arrived, and they were moving on again, their troubles unsolved, leaving behind them two headstones.

The exposure from his days and nights in the swamps after Northfield had injured Frank James's health. It was a weary, hard-pressed man who in the fall of 1877 had arrived in Nashville in his wagon, driving two horses and leading one—his fast one. He made inquiries as to where he could rest, and was directed to a farmer named Ben Drake who lived a few miles out of town. Mr. Drake nursed him, and for this he remained all his life deeply grateful.

Next he moved to the house of Ben Drake's sister, a Mrs. Ledbetter, and there he continued to improve. Meanwhile he was on the lookout for a farm where he could work. He finally found one, the Josiah Walton place on White's Creek, a few miles outside of Nashville. The house stands much as it did when Frank James moved in. It is still in the Walton family. I talked to the grandson, E. B. Walton, who is a prominent Nashville businessman. He told me a story which had come down from his grandfather.

One day Josiah Walton's son started out to see Frank, who was plowing corn. He halloned and got the answer, "Who is it?" Unthinking, the young man continued to plod through the corn. Again came the demand. "Who is it?" Still he plodded on. Suddenly he heard a sound and found himself looking into the barrels of two pistols.

"Son," said Frank, "when people want to know who you are, they're liable to mean it." Then he lowered his pistols.

Frank's financial condition began to improve, and he did what was so deep in him—bought a racehorse named 'Jewel Maxey' and entered it in the local races, riding it himself. He also began to raise pedigreed hogs—so successfully that he took first prize for Poland Chinas at the Nashville fair. Meanwhile the detectives were hunting him high and low.

Frank lived among the people as a Northerner. Now and then this raised a problem. One day he went to Dude Young's blacksmith shop to get his team shod. Dude was an exceedingly powerful blacksmith with large and sinewy arms as strong as iron bands—Longfellow would have loved him. This day, however, he was intoxicated, not at all like the smith that children adore. When Frank James ventured to make a suggestion about the way the horses should be shod, Dude resented it, raging, "You're a damyankee. A carpetbagger, that's what you are. Get out of my shop." This to a man who had fought under Quantrill!

Frank protested that he had a right to specify how his own horses should be shod, whereupon Dude became doubly abusive, calling him vile names and again ordering him out. Frank was armed, for he never relinquished his protection. Goaded by the bellicose Dude, he reached for his pistol. Then, at the last moment, he controlled himself and left. If it had been Jesse, it would have been the end of Dude Young.

Tribute to Margaret

Maragret's death leaves a void in the hearts of the entire community. Her cheery "hello" over the telephone lines had a quality of helpfulness in it that was felt by all. She loved to go "beyond the call of duty" to help where she could.

Knowing her intimately these past 15 years since she came to the telephone office, she was an inspiration to many with her thrifty ambitious nature and high ideals.

Her kind heart overflowed with sympathy when illnesses and death struck us, but never once did she complain of her own illness.

Going in and out among us these many years, sharing joys and sorrows, her presence becoming a habit with us, her memory will linger a long, long time.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

"Fair and Square"

We've just had a political campaign with everything from a torchlight parade to a neck-and-neck ballot box race.

Rusty Robinson, with no campaign funds, planned his Election Eve speech for the Square. Slim McCormick, who owns the Palace movie house, was finishing up his campaign in Pioneer Hall.

Then it began to rain. Rusty's political career was fizzling out in the damp when Slim showed up to say that Robinson people could meet in his theatre—for nothing. "I want to beat Rusty," Slim said, "but certainly not with rain!"

From where I sit, you've got to give Slim credit for acting on his belief that everyone has a right to be heard—just as everyone has a right to his own opinions and tastes. Maybe you like hot coffee, for instance, when you "take a break." Well, my vote goes for a refreshing glass of beer. After all, we're lucky to be living in a free country where we can have our own preferences!

He Knows Another Trick That Beats This One!

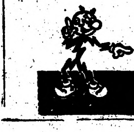
With nothing up his sleeve, Reddy does the trick of the century -- appearing in 90,000 different places at once. He performs this miracle 24 hours a day, 365 days each year, over 8,000 miles of Otter Tail Power Company transmission and distribution line.

And there's more to it than that. The 90,000 places represent Otter Tail Power Company customers spread across a 70,000 square mile expanse of Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota. That's an average of only 1¼ customers per square mile.

To top it off, this is a trick that's done without magic! It's the unbeatable combination of skill, experience and plain hard work that does the job!



Your electric company -- a development of free enterprise through private initiative -- is your best source of low-cost electricity.

Otter Tail Explains Line Trouble

The line trouble on the afternoon of Nov. 30 was caused by a large tree falling into Hi-line on the Middle River crossing northwest of Argyle.

Mr. Wilfred Landreville reported to our Otter Tail office that a large tree he was cutting down got away from him and fell in the wrong direction. The main part of the tree fell across the transmission wires and the resulting short circuit caused the wires to burn off.

Otter Tail crews were rushed to the scene as fast as possible and service was restored. We regret very much the inconvenience and difficulties caused our customers by this incident.

Yours very truly,
Otter Tail Power Company,
W. G. Naylor,
District Manager.

Memoriam of Bertha Moberg

In loving memory of Bertha Moberg, who passed away one sad year ago today, Dec. 7 1950.

Your gentle face and patient smile,
With sadness we recall
You had a kindly word for each
And died beloved by all!
The voice is mute & stilled the heart
That loved us well and true
Ah, bitter was the trial to part
From one so good as you.
You are not forgotten loved one
Nor will you ever be
As long as life and memory last
We will remember thee.
We miss you now our hearts are sore
As time goes by, we miss you more
Your loving smile, your gentle face,
No one can fill your vacant place.

Sadly missed by her parents Mr. and Mrs. Hilmer Moberg and family.

Otter Tales
By... Reddy Kilowatt

A monthly column of news and information published by Otter Tail Power Company, Fergus Falls, Minnesota

I just been over to Joe's Diner keeping things hot in Joe's fry kettle, in his electric food warmer, and on his electric griddle-grill. I never saw a place so clean — out of all the 325,000 commercial eating places in the country, I'll stack Joe's place up against even the Waldorf Astoria.

Joe's Electric Griddle

"How do you keep it so clean?" I asked Joe. He pointed to his all-electric cooking equipment. "There's your answer, Reddy," he said. "Electric cooking is the CLEANEST cooking I ever saw."

I figure Joe knows a lot more about electric cooking so I prodded him with another question. "What is it you like best about your all-electric kitchen, Joe?" I asked, as he popped a hamburger off the electric grill and into an electrically-toasted bun.

Joe grinned. "Shucks, Reddy, I'm in business to make money. And this all-electric kitchen makes it for me! Look at the money I save on food costs — just because there is from 5% to 15% less shrinkage in meat when it's cooked electrically. And my electric fry kettle saves on fats — doesn't burn them or break them down."

"Take this electric range, for instance . . . it saves me a lot of time. I set the controls and do something else, while those big fast roasts are cooking. And not only that", he wagged a finger at me, "they are going to have a MUCH BETTER FLAVOR. The heat in the electric range is even — the juices don't evaporate, there's more nutrition and tasty natural flavor — so my customers like my food and come back for more!"

"We have to give fast service in a place like this," Joe went on, "and that's another BIG advantage of electricity. Electricity is fast — you don't have to hover over it like a hen with a bunch of chicks. Electricity is just like having an assistant cook — only a whole lot cheaper . . . so I save on help. That's like money in the bank, too!"

Joe sure knows what he's talking about. A lot of budget-minded house-wives tell me the same thing . . . that electric cooking is cleaner . . . faster . . . safer . . . more economical . . . and the food tastes M-m-m-m-m so much better!

MARK CROY'S
Jesse James
WAS MY NEIGHBOR

THE STORY SO FAR: The James gang has attempted to rob the bank at Northfield, Minnesota, but it turns into a stunning defeat for the gang. Three of the bandits are killed and the Younger brothers are captured by a posse. Jesse and Frank, however, manage to escape, making a desperate, harried trek through Minnesota, South Dakota and Nebraska, procuring fresh horses as they go. They finally are able to reach Missouri and home. Public opinion now is against them as a result of the cold-blooded killings in Northfield. They decide to take up farming again — this time in Tennessee. So they move their families east to that state and settle down.

CHAPTER XI

It is said that when Dude found out who the damyankee was, he missed his stroke and bent thsee nails in succession.

Jim Cummins turned up. He had been a member of the gang, was none too bright and was of little consequence. Furthermore, he was about the last person in the world that Frank wanted to see just them. He hung around for some time, Frank wishing to God he would clear out. He thought of a dozen ways of getting rid of Jim, without result, until one day he took him down to Warner's Restaurant to buy him a meal, There, standing outside the door, was a detective named Watson. Frank knew the detective was in Nashville but it didn't worry him, as he had little respect for Watson's ability.

When Frank got Jim inside, he told the latter who Watson was, and said: "Jim, come on out and I'll introduce you under another name. You'd like to say you'd met and shaken hands with a detective, wouldn't you?"

"Of course not," declared Jim indignantly.

He got as far back in a corner as he could and ate one of the finest meals ever known in Nashville. Then he proceeded out of Davidson County.

Frank Lives Happily, Then Jesse Shows Up

These were the happiest days Frank James had ever known. He was farming and teaming, and he had ease of mind. The nights of riding and days of terror were over. He was a part of the community (listed in the city directory), was respected and liked by his neighbors, and he had his racehore and his prize hogs.

Then something happened. A two-horse wagon drove up; in it were Jesse and his wife.

Bits and pieces of the old gang had begun to float in. Buck-toothed, watery-eyed Jim Cummins was around again. Bill Ryan, a good man who had a dangerous liking for spirituous liquids. And Dick Liddil, another weak member. Jesse got his men around him and rode away and back to the country they knew so well—their old home in Missouri. Here they could always get protection. The matter turned out quite well. On September 7, 1879, they robbed the Glendale train, on the Chicago & Alton Railroad, of $9400.

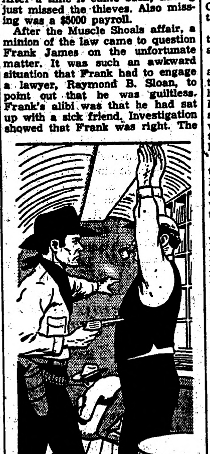
Jesse began to absent himself from Nashville on private missions more and more frequently; once he was gone three months. On another occasion he took Bill Ryan with him, and the two rode away without mentioning where they were going.

Mr. Sam McCoy, driver of a stage plying between Mammoth Cave and Cave City, Kentucky, was swinging comfortably along on September 3, 1880, when two masked men stepped out and rudely commanded him to throw up his hands. He lost no time in doing so. On the stage were six men and a girl. One of the men was Judge Rutherford Harrison Rowntree of Lebanon, Kentucky, and with him was his daughter, Miss Lizzie Rowntree. At the suggestion of the bandits, the passengers began to put their money and jewelry in a grain sack, and one of the articles that went in was Judge Rowntree's watch, a prized possession that had been given to him by the governor of Kentucky. Joining the watch went the daughter's diamond ring, with her pet-name carved inside. The passengers made a cash investment of $503. The watch was valued at $200, and there were, in addition to the ring, other articles of jewelry generously contributed by Miss Lizzie.

A posse rode forth and, as at Glendale a year before accomplishing nothing. But later a man named T. J Hunt was arrested for the robbery and imprisoned for eighteen months, then sentenced to three years This became a famous case of mistaken identity and is still quoted in the lawbooks of Kentucky, for Hunt had nothing in the world to do with the robbery. His misfortune was that he looked a vague bit like Jesse James. The passengers, eager to make somebody pay, swore they recognized him and off to jail he went.

Jesse returned to Nashville better off financially than when he had left, and now his influence on Frank began to take its effect. Perhaps if Frank had been alone he would not have succumbed to the ideas Jesse was proposing. They involved Muscle Shoals, Alabama (later to become part of TVA), which lay not far away. A construction messenger plied between Florence, Alabama, and Muscle Shoals, carrying a goodly payroll. On March 11, 1881, the messenger was relieved of his heavy load by two men who rode off without a satisfactory account of where they were going. Again a posse was formed. After a time it came back, having just missed the thieves. Also missing was a $5000 payroll.

After the Muscle Shoals affair, a minion of the law came to question Frank James on the unfortunate matter. It was such an awkward situation that Frank had to engage a lawyer, Raymond B. Sloan, to point out that he was guiltless. Frank's alibi was that he had sat up with a sick friend. Investigation showed that Frank was right. The lawyer asked the sick neighbor as to what time of night Frank left, saying, "Could Mr. James have had time to reach Muscle Shoals by the time the robbery was committed?"



The two Fords stood over him a moment, each with a gun in hand, to make sure the deed had been accomplished.

The neighbor thought it over carefully. "Yes," he said, "he just about had time to make it."

That ended the questioning.

Bill Ryan Is Taken, Law on James's Trail

The two brothers realized that a good and foolproof arrangement about alibis was going to be of considerable use to them, and they hit upon a novel method. Having teams and wagons, they made a deal with the road commissioner to haul gravel in their spare time. The careless commissioner did not pay any particular attention to the dates on the receipts the James brothers prepared for him to sign. It didn't seem important. But later, when mischief took place, it developed that the Boys could prove they had been hauling gravel like any two honest men.

Frank and Jesse had no more than settled down after the Muscle Shoals affair than trouble again tapped. It had to do with Bill Ryan, the problem child. He was fearless and was to be depended on when people were being relieved of their money, but there was the matter of drink. He had been hiding under the name of Tom Hill. On March 26, 1881, he rode up to a grocery store with a saloon attachment at White's Creek, on the fringe of Nashville. Dismounting, he wove his way unsteadily in and managed to anchor to the bar. His eyes wandered here and there, seeing things denied to others. Suddenly he pounded on the bar and called for whiskey and oysters—an unusual combination. They were cove oysters, canned, and were considered a great treat in country districts (and still are, for that matter). It proved to be an ill-chosen combination, for soon he felt a desire to trounce the disagreeable people he saw around him. Suddenly he let off a mighty yip and said, "Stand back and give me room or I'll shoot you as full of holes as a sausage grinder! Do you know who I am?" His gaze wandered unsteadily over the customers. "Well, I'll tell you who I am," he roared. "I'm Tom Hill, the outlaw, thash who I am!"

It so happened that an ex-detective was on the street outside; a messenger sped to him and the detective entered the saloon.

By this time Bill Ryan was offering to fight Middle Tennessee.

The detective (not a Pinkerton) crept silently up behind and threw his arms around the oyster lover and pinned the latter's arms to his side. Others helped—willingly, now—and in a moment Bill Ryan was trussed up like a Christmas turkey. They sent word to the police department, in Nashville proper, and soon Bill Ryan was on the way to the cooler.

There they searched him and found he had two revolvers and a buckskin vest containing $1300 in gold. The police asked how he had gotten it. "By honest labor," said Bill. This immediately aroused suspicion. But they were not able to dig up a single clue as to his identity. The police telegraphed a description of the liquor-and-oyster lover to the police chiefs of the country; word came from Kansas City asking for details. These were telegraphed. Then word came. "We think he is Bill Ryan of Jackson County. Will send a man to investigate."

It wasn't long before Bill was on the way back to his native state, a distaste in his mouth for oysters.

The day of the arrest Jesse was away from home; he returned late that evening on horseback. When he came in his wife told him what had happened. He was thunderstruck. Bill Ryan had been living with him, he had eaten breakfast in the house . . . now he was in the hands of the police.

What would happen? Would he tell where Jesse and Frank were? Even if he didn't, the police and detectives might guess he had been with them. Something would have to be done.

Frank came to see Jesse and in Jesse's house they talked it over. Roughly speaking, Jesse had been in Nashville two years, Frank four. Here their children had been born. Here Jesse had joined the church and Frank had won first prize for his Poland China hogs. Now the pleasant, easygoing days were over. The two would again have to be on the move. Outlaws again.

Jesse Reorganizes His Bandit Crew

They decided to chance staying overnight. The next day their families would have to go, too—little Tim Howard and his sister Mary Howard, and little Mary Woodson—but the men must go fastest of all. In the morning Jesse and Frank sat on horseback in the back yard of Jesse's home. They talked a few minutes, then shook hands. "Goodbye, Frank," said Jesse. "Goodbye, Dingus," said Frank; and the two rode off in opposite directions.

Jesse picked up Dick Liddil and the two started west. Now and then doubt came to him about Dick, who was shifty and none too bold. Bill Ryan had been the best man he had had . . . except for the drinking. Oh well . . . they were heading back to the state where they had friends.

But the war had been over some time; law was pretty well established in a land where it had been a stranger, and the ex-guerrillas hesitated to shelter old friends just because they had ridden together. They hesitated, too, at the idea of joining up with Jesse again. He had lost six men at Northfield; could he build up a new band? He had done so, briefly, when he had come back for the Glendale robbery. But it was not in a class with the old —James-Youngers. He had to have something as good as that if he was to go on.

On his way back to Missouri he stopped at Samuels Depot, Kentucky, where he had an old Clay County friend—Donnie Pence. Pence had not only been a boyhood friend, but had also ridden with Jesse as a guerrilla. On top of this, he was the sheriff of Nelson County—the last place in the world where a detective would look. Here Jesse set about organizing a new band.

He got together some of his veterans, but he also had to put in green timber. He rounded them up by letter, writing them and receiving the answers addressed to Donnie Pence or through Miss Nannie Mimms, his wife's cousin, who also lived in Samuels Depot. The kind of letter he sent out ran like this:

> I will be at your house on (the date filled in).
> Respectfully,
> Joe

Translated, it meant: Meet me at Donnie Pence's on the date mentioned.

He moved south to Adairville, Kentucky, where his uncle, George Hite, lived, and enlisted two of Uncle George's sons, 'Wood' and Clarence. Robert Woodson Hite and Clarence Growler Hite: they were the only two cousins who ever rode with Jesse. If it has been written once it has been written ten thousand times that Bob Ford was Jesse's cousin; not true. The legend persists that the Youngers were also his cousins; not true. Just Wood and Clarence.

Now the band was beginning to shape up.

At last, three months after he and Frank had turned their backs on Nashville, Jesse felt he was ready. He gathered his band and made a quick foray into Missouri, where, at Winston on July 5, 1881, they held up a train. It didn't go so well. Two members of the train crew were killed and the take was small. The whole thing was badly handled and lacked the precision of the early robberies. Jesse was grim and there was no joking. It was a bad start—were his great days behind him? The men became difficult to handle: Frank seemed aloof.

He met Charlie Ford, who lived near Richmond, Missouri, in Ray County. Charlie wanted to join and Jesse accepted him. The Fords bore none-too-good a reputation, but he could no longer afford to be particular. Charlie might be just the man. And he began to hear about Charlie's younger brother, Bob, who was nineteen.

U. S. Charges Commies 'Murdered' 5,500 American Prisoners of War

ATROCITIES—A wave of anger rolled across the United States with the grim announcement by Eighth Army officers that the Reds have killed about 5,500 Americans and 290 other U.N. prisoners of war. Civilian and senate reaction was immediate and brought demands the Korean truce negotiations be broken off and use of atomic weapons against the Communists.

Representative Crawford of Michigan summed up the average civilian's point of view by stating: "Let's get an answer from the Communists or let's quit negotiating and get tough and push the fight to a conclusion."

The atrocity report said the Chinese had killed 2,513 American prisoners, 10 British, 40 Turkish, 5 Belgian and 75 others of "unknown nationality". The remainder of the victims were slain by North Koreans before or after the Chinese entered the war. It was also estimated that the Chinese have killed at least 2,790 non-Korean prisoners and the North Koreans about 3,000.

The worse atrocity was blamed on the Chinese who killed 1,250 Americans near the Yalu river boundary of Manchuria between September 16 and 18, 1950.

The Eighth Army spokesman who released the atrocity story gave no reason for making it public at this particular time. One result, however, is expected to be the cementing of public opinion for a quick peace or an all-out fight using, if necessary, atomic weapons.

Immediately after the story was released there were reports of investigations into whether or not the death figures were correct. Latest reports indicated they might be revised upward.

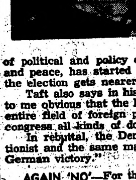
PEACE TALKS—There was, however, every indication that a cease-fire might be in prospect for the Korean battle front and possibly an armistice by Christmas. Allied and Communist negotiators were reported nearing agreement on the latest U.N. proposal.

The Allied plan consisted of four points: (1) Hostilities to continue until an armistice is signed; (2) the present battle line to be a provisional cease-fire line; (3) this line to become final if a full armistice is reached within 30 days; and (4) if the armistice is not reached within 30 days, negotiations will start over by drawing a new cease-fire line based on whatever the battle line may be at that time.

The idea behind the Allies plan to gain a cease-fire now, but at the same time keeping the pressure on the Reds so the final armistice agreement could be negotiated.

Distrust between the Allies and Communists remains the biggest hurdle in any peace settlement.

POLITICS—As a general rule politicians have always been reluctant of putting down in black and white definite opinions on domestic and foreign policies, especially before an important election. Sen. Robert A. Taft, at the moment leading contender for the GOP nomination for president, is an exception to the rule.



The senator recently wrote a book setting forth his views concerning U. S. foreign policy which he entitled, "A Foreign Policy for Americans". Before next year's campaign is over it could be that Senator Taft will wish he had never had the inspiration or time for his literary effort.

The senator, charging that President Truman put "all kinds of political and policy considerations" ahead of his interest in liberty and peace, has started a cyclone in political circles that will grow as the election gets nearer.

Taft also says in his book, "If the present trend continues, it seems to me obvious that the President will become a complete dictator in the entire field of foreign policy and thereby acquire power to force upon congress all kinds of domestic policies which must necessarily follow."

In rebuttal, the Democrats are charging that Taft is still an isolationist and the same man who said in 1940: "War is even worse than a German victory."

AGAIN 'NO'—For the second time in as many weeks President Truman had occasion to say "no" to a proposal that he meet with Premier Stalin, Prime Minister Churchill and Premier Pleven for a big four conference. The suggestion was made by President Vincent Auriol of France.

The President contended the United Nations is the forum in which the leaders of the world should work for peace. He added, however, he would be willing to confer with Stalin if the Soviet leader came to Washington.

On several occasions the President has given the same answer to such a proposition, expressing the opinion that agreements with the Russians are not worth the paper on which they are written.

MEAT SUPPLY—The small town housewife will resume her role as the dictator of prices of steaks, chops and roasts in the neighborhood butcher shop in the next few months. That is the opinion of prominent cattle producers and farmers in the midwest corn belt where cattle and swine are finished for market.

Stockmen base their reasoning on mounting livestock production in the nation, with federally inspected beef plants turning out beef at a higher rate than in any November in four years.

Housewife resistance to high prices is credited with already rolling back pork prices from 1 to 12 cents a pound below ceiling levels.

Gross farm income is reported higher this year than last because of the large numbers of animals marketed at higher prices, but net profits are reduced because of higher operating costs.

Also of concern to cattle producers is rising imports of foreign meat, some of which has not yet been placed on the market. This country's imports of pork and beef this year are breaking all former records. Pork imports are up 60 per cent over last year.

AUTO TOLL—The National Safety Council, which has geared its statistical service to a weekly basis, reported last week the death figure from automobile accidents has reached 995,600. The millionth death will occur during the third week of December, the NSC predicts.

"This tragic event would make a mockery of all that Christmas stands for," Ned H. Dearborn, council president said. "I appeal to everyone to drive and walk with extreme caution during the next few weeks. The millionth traffic death can be delayed if everyone does his part."

NEW TAXES—While vacationing in Florida, President Truman is reported to be working on another request to congress for increased taxes. The report states he will definitely ask for more money when the lawmakers come back to work in January. Only the amount of the increase is yet to be determined.

The report immediately drew the fire of Republicans and Democrats alike. Several stated they will not vote for any more taxes. And Senator George of Georgia, chairman of the powerful finance committee which handles tax measures in the senate, has already stated he will not vote for an increase "short of all-out war or a war crisis."

The lawmakers are well aware of the fact that 1952 is an election year and that a tax increase is always an unpopular measure.

UNITED NATIONS—Talk continued in the United Nations last week on disarmament with the Western powers outlining details of their plan and the Russians proposing one of their own, a dusted-off version of one that has been rejected by the West a number of times.

Not even the most optimistic member of the United Nations believed that anything other than talk would come from the proposed plans. The rival disarmament plans are attracting a great deal of space in newspapers in all parts of the world, but the general public seems to view them as propaganda.

IS STALIN ABOUT TO DIE?

Rumors Say Premier's Heart Weakened

Is Premier Stalin of Russia about to die?

That question was being asked by world leaders around the globe last week as rumors began circulating in Berlin that Stalin's health has deteriorated greatly in the past month or so.

The Premier, who will be 72 next month, is believed making his usual winter visit to a Black Sea resort to escape Moscow's cold weather.

He was absent from the tribunal atop Lenin's tomb when the Soviet armed forces paraded through Red Square in Moscow November 7, the 34th anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution. The rumor persists that he was not there because of the heart condition, from which he has suffered for years.

Husband May Have 'Substitute Wife'

Does your husband have a substitute wife?

"Ridiculous as it may sound, such dramas of infidelity are being played out every day in countless of respectable American homes," according to a columinist and marriage consultant, Dr. George W. Crane, writing in Coronet.

In his article, SIX RULES OF LOVE TO HOLD A HUSBAND, Dr. Crane explains that the problem of the straying husband is fundamentally a problem in opposed views, and it can be solved if each party makes a special effort at understanding. At the cost of hours lost from doing things she would much rather do, today's average wife has become an excellent cook and housewife, dedicating herself to the high ideal of family life, and at the same time, neglecting the importance of extended physical love in a successful marriage.

A normal man feels frustrated unless he achieves normal sex expression, without it, his ego is impaired; his personality off balance. Yet, thousands of women are apparently unaware of this simple truth.

"Men, all over, seek romantic satisfaction," continues Dr. Crane, "First of all, in their own homes. If they fail to find it there, they go outside, not because they want to, but because they are driven to it. The average husband, deprived of this love and satisfaction in his home, is forced to resort to a substitute wife, despite the chance he takes of wrecking his home. "Tradition, notwithstanding, the way to hold a husband is not by being a matchless cook and housekeeper."

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD

● Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!

Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon . . . right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, worn-out feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

Dim Lights, Warns State Highway Patrol

A growing laxity on the part of Minnesota motorists in dimming their headlights has evoked a warning from the State Highway Patrol. Failure to comply with this night driving requirement can have serious consequences.

It has been fairly well established that a recent head-on collision in Michigan, in which six people were killed and 11 children made orphans, resulted from one of the drivers deliberately refusing to dim his lights. The resulting crash, with its terrible aftermath, was a big price to pay for this wanton act.

Korean Peace by Christmas Possible; U.S. Casualties Now Total 100,176

KOREA—Peace in Korea by Christmas is the one gift the people of America's home towns desire more than any other. Although there is no assurance that such a peace will be forthcoming, the possibility does exist.

The hope that the world will have peace by Christmas was bolstered by reports from Korea that the Communists and Allies were nearing agreement on a cease-fire line across that war-torn country. The negotiators were so close to agreement it may be the line will have been established by the time this appears in print.

Agreement on the cease-fire line, however, does not mean peace by Christmas. After ratification of the line, it becomes the final buffer zone across Korea, provided the two sides agree within 30 days on all remaining armistice issues. If no 30-day agreement is reached on supervising the truce, exchange of prisoners and recommendations to the governments on troop withdrawals, the buffer line will be revised when a full armistice finally is signed.

Considering past experiences in negotiations with the Communists, the 30-day talking period would seem very short. Their delaying tactics have consumed months thus far and it is unlikely they will change them.

MARCH OF DIMES
FIGHT INFANTILE PARALYSIS
JANUARY 2-31

THE DEAD—Meanwhile, this limited Asian conflict, called a police action by many, has turned into the fourth costliest war in this nation's history. The casualty list now totals 100,176, the Defense department reports.

The actual battle figure is higher than the latest released figures, because official announcements of this kind are generally two or three weeks behind combat action.

In comparison, the total battle losses for the entire war in the southwest Pacific was 113,991. Of this total, 84,200 were killed or wounded.

DISARMAMENT—The most important question discussed at the U. N. meeting in Paris thus far has been disarmament on a world-wide scale. Both the west and the east have offered their plans.

General disarmament would give the people in the home towns of this country and elsewhere in the world a new sense of security. The outlook, however, is gloomy.

The Russians insist that prohibition of atomic bombs ought to precede any disarmament move, followed by a big five disarmament conference, and an immediate one-third cut of all conventional armed forces and weapons.

The western idea is for an orderly, stage-by-stage process, starting with a census of existing armaments, including atomic and armed forces; real inspection and verification of any arms cuts; and ultimate prohibition of atomic weapons.

The possibility of a compromise between the two views is unlikely. As a result, the world can expect the general assembly to become mired in debate and world tension to continue at the present level.

THE COLD WAR—On the Cold War front there was one important development during the past week. President Truman ordered withdrawal of all American tariff concessions to the Soviet Union and Poland. In addition, the President imposed a complete ban on the importation of luxury furs from the two Communist countries.

Some weeks ago Russia halted all shipments of manganese to the U. S. and since that time the fur trade has been an important source of dollar revenue for the Communist bloc.

The President's action does not completely halt imports from the Soviet Union and Poland, but it does mean the two countries will have to pay higher tariff rates. Similar action had previously been taken against Communist regimes in Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria, Hungary, Romania and China.

EUROPE—Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, supreme commander of Allied forces in Europe, told North Atlantic Treaty nations last week that "baby" A-bombs and other new weapons eventually may cut Europe's military requirements, but in the meantime everything possible must be done to build western defenses.

The general said he wanted as many divisions as fast as they could be supplied—between 30 and 40 in 1952 and between 60 and 70 by 1954.

He warned the Atlantic Treaty nations "there is no possibility, if war comes, of any of us, our children, or our children's children, living a life of decency again."

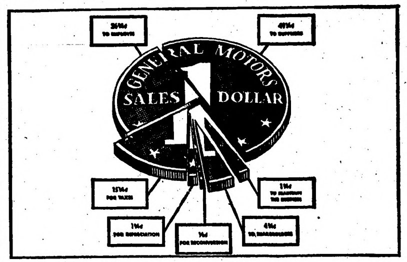
FARM TREND—The latest Bureau of the Census report reveals there has been a decided trend toward fewer but bigger and better equipped farms between 1940 and 1950. In 1950 there were 5,384,000 farms in the United States compared to 6,097,000 in 1940.

During the decade, however, the average size farm unit grew from 174 acres to 210.5 acres. Despite the decrease in the number of farms the total acreage remained approximately the same in 1950 as in 1945.

Other statistics in the report included: (1) About 870,000 fewer persons were working on U. S. farms in 1950 than in 1940; (2) Less than one-third as many horses and mules were on farms in 1950 as in 1920; (3) In 1950 there were 59,764,000 cattle and calves more than three months old on farms as compared to 60,674,736 in April, 1940; (4) The number of chickens on farms was 2,500,000, or 0.7 per cent more than in 1940.

GAMBLING—The new federal tax on gambling may reach into hundreds of home towns as a result of a new ruling by Revenue Commissioner John B. Dunlap. The commissioner has ruled that the $50 license fee on gambling applies to thousands of stores which have punch boards on their premises.

Each clerk in such establishments as tobacco shops, gas stations and other retail stores where the owners accept money from a customer for a punch board chance must purchase a license, he ruled.



What happens to the millions big corporations take in each year has often baffled the man on Main Street. Here is how General Motors, one of the biggest in the nation, spent its sales dollar: 26 3/4 cents to employees, 49 1/4 cents to suppliers, 15 1/4 cents for taxes, 1 3/4 cents for depreciation, 1/2 cent for reconversion, 4 3/4 cents to shareholders, and 1 3/4 to maintain the business.

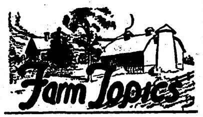
NATIONAL DEBT

U. S. Debt Nearing $275 Billion Limit

Barring unexpected chang s in the present economic trend, the United States debt is expected to push past the present legal limit of $275,000,000,000 during the next year. As a result, Secretary of the Treasury Snyder is expected to ask congress to raise the national debt ceiling.

At the end of November the national debt was estimated at $259,000,000,000, an increase of $4 billion since April and the highest in 4½ years.

By June, 1952, the debt is expected to amount to $262,500,000,000. If present spending and tax receipt forecasts are correct the debt will pass the $65 billion mark during the following six months. This would necessitate lifting the legal debt ceiling.

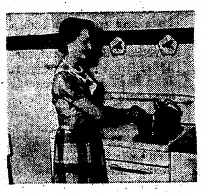


Small Town Utility Serves Farm Folks

Gas Made Available To Farms for First Time

The farm folks within 20 miles of Antigo, Wis., have gone in for gas in a big way. This new interest of farm folks in heating and cooking with gas started over a year ago with the reorganization of Antigo's City Gas company.

The Antigo utility which manufactured gas from oil, coke and steam converted its plant to "propane-air" gas and offered service to farm homes and rural firms within a radius of 20 miles.



Mrs. Dale Madison, a rural homemaker, has converted her kitchen to gas, and reports it gives her more freedom from kitchen duties.

The new rural customers have their own "backyard utility" in the form of storage tanks for large users and "bottled" installations for homes with smaller consumption.

Because they are a part of the Antigo utility system, country customers receive monthly fuel bill just like the town. Fuel consumption is recorded on a meter attached to their cylinders or tanks. Bad weather can't interrupt service, since a sufficient supply is stored on the premises in advance of use. Empty cylinders are periodically replaced by company service men.

Since the reorganization, rates have been reduced for town and farm users three times.

Contour Farming Cuts Soil Losses in Half

Iowa agronomists report that contour farming cuts soil losses in half, boosts corn yields as much as 7.4 bushels per acre and ups soybean production by 2.7 bushels.

Other advantages from contour farming include lower fuel and operating costs for tractors and other machinery and an increase in the length of corn rows.

The need for more contour cultivation will increase with the steadily expanding acreage of row crops to meet the nation's food needs.

While contouring is a vital step in keeping soil at home, other soil building measures are needed to keep farm land at high yielding levels. Every crop burns up organic matter and uses up plant nutrients. The organic matter can be replenished by growing well-fertilized deep-rooted legumes regularly in the rotation and by returning manure and crop residues to the soil.

Safety Plug

[illegible] developed that should be of interest to most farmers. It has a tiny replacable fuse. Electrical cords are connected to the plug exactly as they are connected to the wall socket itself. The fuse blows out should a short circuit develop in any connected cord. This prevents current from reaching the danger point, instantly cutting off the source of fire.

Nebraska Farmers Paid High Cost for Corn Crop

Nebraska farmers paid with two lives, 194 fingers, 18 hands, 10 arms, one leg, four toes and two feet in gathering approximately 225 million bushels of corn. That is last year's accident record. Failure to stop the cornpicker before trying to remove the stoppage of the machine accounted for almost every accident. Farmers should discuss safety problems with their harvest crews.

HOMER CROY'S
Jesse James
WAS MY NEIGHBOR

THE STORY SO FAR: After the Northfield fiasco, Frank and Jesse James go to Tennessee and settle down on farms. These are peaceful days for Frank—then Jesse and his family show up in Nashville, where Frank is living. Together again, the brothers stage a train robbery, a stage coach robbery and a payroll job at Muscle Shoals. Then trouble strikes again. Bill Ryan, a member of their Tennessee band, is captured and detectives once again pick up the trail of Frank and Jesse. The Boys are forced to move again, this time back to Kentucky and then on to Missouri. It is about this time that Charlie Ford, Bob Ford's elder brother, joins Jesse's band.

CHAPTER XII

Without waiting for the cry to die down after the Winston robbery, without giving himself enough time to know the several new recruits who had come in or to plan properly, Jesse swept down on Blue Cut, Missouri. The day was prophetic—September 7, 1881, exactly five years after Northfield. Blue Cut, on the Chicago & Alton Railroad a few miles from Kansas City, was territory he knew well. The grain sack came out, passengers made their contributions, the men got on their horses and loped away . . . and, some time later, a posse thundered gently after them.

But only $1200 had been taken. On the whole, it was another botched job.

After the Blue Cut robbery Jesse rode back to Kentucky, to Donnie's and to Uncle George's, where he felt safest. He had many friends in Missouri, but also enemies. In Kentucky he had both friends and relatives, but there were fewer people who knew him by sight. That reward was still on his head. And more trouble was on its way.

Jesse Begins to Fear Betrayal for Reward

The dark shadows were lengthening. Harder than ever to keep together and to control after the failures at Winston and Blue Cut were Jesse's men. The fear of being shot for the reward became more and more vivid to him, and he and his companions began to live in an atmosphere of mutual suspicion. One of these companions was Ed Miller, the brother of Clell Miller who was hanging on a hook in a docter's office. Evidence shows that Ed had $600 stowed away and wanted to quit. Be that as it may, Jesse and Ed went out riding. Only Jesse came back. He had shot and killed Ed Miller and left his body beside the road. At such times he was hard and merciless; he felt Ed was turning traitor, so he shot him without compunction.

Now even Jesse could see that it was time for him to have a change of scenery.

St. Joseph was a booming, prosperous city with a population of 40,000. In the old days the covered wagons had started from there to California; herds of cattle had been driven from St. Joseph by foot all the way across the plains. The place had been settled by Joseph Robidoux (pronounced by the people of St. Joseph 'Roobidoo'), who had thirteen children and had named a street for each one. It was here that the Pony Express riders, twenty years before, had leaped on their horses and raced to the Missouri River, where they were rowed across, and on the Kansas side had leaped on again and continued until they reached Sacramento, California. Jesse could crane his neck out his window and see the Pony Express barns where the horses were kept. It was an interesting, an exciting city . . . and it was soon to become even more interesting.

Jesse had been known in Tennessee and in other states as 'J.D. Howard,' but here he changed his alias to 'Tom Howard.' His wife called him 'Dave,' while he had a number of names for her—'Mary,' Kate,' sometimes whatever he could think of at the moment.

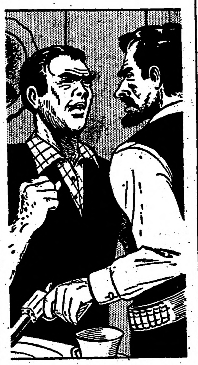
They arrived November 8, 1881, and rented a house on the corner of Lafayette and Twenty-First Streets. There they stayed a little over six weeks, then moved a few blocks away to a house at 1318 Lafayette Street, which was owned by a member of the City Council and for which they paid $14 a month. It was not much trouble to move, for all the household articles they owned were the ones they could carry in a two-horse wagon.

They moved in on Christmas Eve. Everywhere in town were signs of Christmas preparations, everywhere except in their house. Jesse looked at the children he loved so much. They must have some kind of Christmas Eve. But what? They could hang up their stockings, but there should be something more.

There was to be a Christmas-tree party at the Presbyterian church where toys, popcorn balls, and candy would be given away. Jesse went to the church to see if he could get some Christmas things, and, there in the basement, saw some suits to be worn by the Santa Clauses, and there, also, were whisker sets, made chiefly out of baling wire and bindertwine. An idea came to him. He took one of the outfits home, got the presents they had bought for the children, and then, dressed-up like a jolly Santa Claus, came into the room.

The children were awed—Santa Claus had actually come to see them. Changing his voice to a deep note he said, "Tim, have you been a good boy this year?"

"Yes, Santa Claus," the lad quavered, trembling with excitement.



On September 7, 1879, they robbed the Glendale train, on the Chicago & Alton Railroad, of $9,400.

"Mary, have you been a good girl?"

"Yes, Santa Claus."

He pulled the presents from his pack and gave them to the delighted children, and a fine, lovely spirit vibrated in the room. Tim came closer and, boylike, wanted to know if there was anything else for him. He began to feel of the bag, hopping joyfully around; suddenly he stopped with a mystified expression on his face. His little fingers had come upon his father's revolvers.

Young Bob Ford Comes Into the Life of Jesse

"You're not Santa Claus," he wailed; "you're only my Pa."

Jesse took him into his arms and tried to comfort him, saying he was just helping Santa Claus tonight, that Santa Claus himself would bring other presents and for him and Mary to go to bed and be good children. Then the father hurried back to the church and returned the suit and whiskers before the regular distribution of presents began.

And now there came into his life a boy whom he hardly knew.

You have to go back a little way to get a true picture of Bob Ford's relations with Jesse. He was fifteen years younger. He had been born in Virginia, but when still a boy had moved to Ray County, not far from where the James family dwelt. (He lived for a short while at the Seybold Tavern, about a mile and a half from Excelsior Springs, which during the Gold Rush days had been a favorite stopping place for California-bound travelers; it still stands.)

Bob Ford heard the James Boys talked about constantly, and he became obsessed with the idea of capturing them. Other boys in the neighborhood liked to play 'stick horse,' but he wanted to play 'capturing robbers.' He envisioned himself as a great hero. And while he was growing up there occurred an incident which prevented this boyish ambition from disappearing in the natural course of time.

Jesse had discovered that Jim Cummins was proving untrustworthy, and decided to deal with him as he had with Ed Miller. He thought that Cummins was at the home of Bob Ford's father, and there he went. Albert Ford, a fifteen-year-old cousin of Bob, was there. Jesse asked him where Cummins was. Albert didn't know, but Jesse thought he was withholding the truth and slapped and knocked the boy roughly about before he rode away.

Young Bob Ford seized on this. To killing Jesse for glory was now added the element of killing to satisfy a grudge. And in time, as Bob grew older, he began to think, too, about that huge reward on Jesse's head.

In the summer of 1881 Charlie Ford joined Jesse's band. From time to time he would mention he had a younger brother who was anxious to ride with the Boys.

Then, during the first week in December, 1881, occurred something which turned the paths of Bob Ford and Jesse still more sharply toward each other. Bob had a sister, Mrs. Martha Bolton, whose reputation was not as white as a heavenly dove. In point of fact, she was living with Dick Liddil. The two of them were together on Martha's farm near Richmond, Missouri, at the time, which was three months after the Blue Cut robbery. Also there were Wood Hite, who had come from Kentucky, and Bob Ford.

On the morning of December 4th Dick and Wood began to quarrel over the way the Blue Cut money had been divided. Dick said that Wood had grabbed off $100 too much; Wood said he hadn't and called Dick a liar, something that should be done only after prolonged thought. Breakfast was soon a feast of lead, Dick and Wood serving each other. But they fetched only wounds. Then Bob Ford, who had nothing to do with the matter at all, hauled out his gun and killed Wood Hite.

Killing a cousin of Jesse James could not under any circumstances be thought of as a prescription for attaining great age. Bob, however, got out of the difficulty with the help of an older brother (not Charlie); the two of them carried the body, wrapped in a horse blanket, into the woods about half a mile from the house, and buried it in an abandoned well with rocks thrown on top of it. Then Bob calmly went his way.

Ford Makes a Deal With the Governor

The killing remained a secret from Jesse. The only other people who knew about it were Dick Liddil and his mistress, and the effect of the incident was therefore to draw Dick and Bob close together. The former had always been a weak link in the gang. Now the link snapped. He made a deal with Bob, and threw in with the latter's plan to murder Jesse.

The ambitious young killer set about his task in earnest. He went first to Kansas City, where he saw the police and got himself appointed a detective. This would protect him and put the intended killing in the proper legal line of duty. Then he cast about for some way of assuring himself that what he was to do would also receive a proper reward.

Missouri had a governor who saw the political possibilities of cleaning up the Jesse James gang. It'd elect him to a later term, he figured. A fashionable ball was being held in Kansas City in honor of Craig's Rifles, a carryover from the Civil War. Governor T. T. Crittenden attended. Then, after the ball, he had a secret meeting with Bob Ford, at one o'clock in the morning at the St. James Hotel in Kansas City, and there gave what amounted to official sanction of the murder of Jesse James. Hard words, but true ones. The date was January 13, 1882. No one was present at the meeting but the two; later, however, Ford on the witness stand swore to what had been said.

During the talk, Governor Crittenden promised to pay $10,000 dead or alive for each of the James Boys.

Bob Ford had a favor to ask for putting Jesse away—pardon for Dick Liddil. And Governor Crittenden promised it. What a horse-swapping that was!

Governor Crittenden then told Ford to report to the chief of police in Kansas City and to the sheriff of Clay County, advising them of the situation.

Ford had everything set now, except that he didn't know where Jesse was. He might as well have been a Pinkerton. Then the final stitch in the pattern was taken.

Jesse was planning another robbery, but he had only one person to help him and that was the weakling, Charlie Ford. So he asked Ford where he could get another man and Ford suggested his brother Bob.

The two decided to ride to Richmond and see Bob, but when they got there they found that he was at the home of his uncle in another county, so back to their horses went Jesse and Charlie. They finally reached the place at night, and shouted for Bob to come out. He knew his brother's voice and realized Jesse must be with him. He trembled . . . had Jesse found out? But still, his brother was with Jesse.

He came forth frightened and shaking—and heard fine news indeed. Jesse was there in front of him, and was asking him if he would help rob a bank.

Bob said he would be glad to help.

When he had a chance he took his brother aside and told him that he intended to kill Jesse. Charlie was shocked, but there was the reward money and the honor of doing what the detectives had failed to do; finally he told Bob he would come in with him.

Next Jesse and the plotting brothers rode to Jesse's mother's at Kearney, where they found strange horses in the barn. John Samuels had just been shot at a party and was near death; friends of his had come in to sit up with him, as was then the custom. So Jesse and the two Fords hid in the barn until the others left at daylight.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Sign of a Nice Guy

Got so around these parts that everywhere a hunter went this fall, he came up against signs saying "PRIVATE PROPERTY, NO HUNTING, KEEP OFF." But not out at Happy Preston's place!

Happy's signs say "PRIVATE PROPERTY, GOOD HUNTING, BUT BE CAREFUL."

"Don't hunt myself," Happy says, "but there's plenty of game on my property. I tell the hunters where the best spots are—away from where I'm working and where nobody else is hunting. It works out pretty well all-around."

From where I sit, Happy has once again shown why he gets along with everyone and why everyone respects him. Happy's likes and dislikes might not be the same as his neighbors', but that doesn't stop him from understanding. When it comes to opinions on hunting, fishing, politics, ways of farming, or whether your favorite beverage is beer or cider, try to be like Happy and the chances are you'll be really happy!

Heavenly Headlines

by Pastor Brandt

Have you been reading the papers lately? If you have you couldn't miss the unfinished symphony of sin, war, bloodshed, violence, famine and trouble which afflicts your world and mine. These are the headlines of the world. Grim, aren't they? These are the stories the world has always read. These are the stories produced by a sin-ridden world. To an acute observer there doesn't seem to be much hope for the world. At least, many experts are predicting that Western civilization is well on its way to destruction. They say man will destroy himself with the terrible weapons of war. If this is true, then surely, it is most distressing. Yet in spite of it all, I'm still an optimist, because I know I'm reading "Earthly Headlines".

If I want headlines which carry real authority, I'll go and read the "Heavenly Headlines" produced in the throne room of God.

It pleased God to release this story over 1900 years ago. Now, to be sure, this story would never have caused much activity in the world of the giant linotype or rotory press, because the world has never wanted to read news such as this. The world is never very interested in "Heavenly Headlines" yet this news release came directly from God. If Bethlehem would have had a daily paper when Christ was born, I'm sure the editor would not have considered the birth of Jesus any more significant than the birth of any child. In spite of that, this Child changed the history of the world, for "There is born in the city of David, a Savior, who is Christ the Lord". He was no ordinary child for He was the long-promised Messiah, who was to save His people from their sins. Do you see now why I'm an optimist? I know that the One who rules in heaven is far greater than any man. I know that even if man insists on destroying the world, there is something infinitely greater in store for those who believe the heavenly story.

"He shall save the people from their sins" wrote Matthew, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. Why then, shouldn't we look up with new hope? Jesus has died for the sins of the world. No matter how black our sins may be, or how long we have sinned, or how stubborly we have refused the grace of God, the birth of Christ assures us of the love of God for us sinners. His love was expressed on Calvary, when He permitted Himself to be crucified for the sins of the world, That's the heavenly story!

Amidst the feverish activity which attends the Christmas season, it is easy for us to lose the real meaning of Christmas. It is easy to forget the "Heavenly Headlines", published in God's throne room. It is fashionable to reject this story as untrue. But let's be old fashioned this Christ-

Otter Tales

By . . . Reddy Kilowatt

This is the time of year when you start adding things up in your head to see what kind of progress you've made during the past twelve months. And it's the same way with the Otter Tail folks - - around Christmas they always ask me to paint a little word picture of how they've done in improving service and in bringing more electricity to more people. And you can take it from your friend, Reddy, the picture looks all right.

Otter Tail crews were busy building new and rebuilding old transmission lines - - more than 400 miles of it. Over $1,200,000 went into improving distribution systems in towns in the Otter Tail service territory. Work progressed rapidly on the new 115,000 volt transmission network, and 20,000 KVA of additional transformer capacity was installed around the system. A new office building was built at Hallock, and 3,500 people visited the grand opening of the three and a half million dollar, 15,000 kilowatt plant in Ortonville.

These are the highlights: They account for only a portion of the nearly two million hours Otter Tail employees worked during the year to provide you with the comforts of electric living. We'll be working just as hard to serve you in 1952, with time out now just to say - -

Room 1

We have a very different Christmas tree. We're pretending we are pioneer children who lived 50 years ago. We live far from evergreen trees so we took a boxelder tree and trimmed it. First we made needles by wrapping the branches with slashed paper lengths. We have made some old time paper ornaments, have hung apples, and have real Christmas candles in holders.

We strung popcorn and have a glass ornament at the top. Maybe some reader will help us with other ideas from early days.

We have a fireplace near our tree. Miss Knutson let us use her electric light for our fireplace

Room 2

The fourth graders have completed their reader "Times and Places" including woorkbook. They are now reading "Around the year."

Our two snowmen are really being plastered with snowballs by the spelling classes.

As a special English assignment this week we are writing poems. The theme centers around Christmas. Freehand drawings will be an added attraction.

Room 3

James L. returned to school after spending Thanksgiving at

Ringbo Rambles

A nice crowd enjoyed a Christmas party at the Ringbo school given by the Farmers Union Local. Christmas Carols were sung. Roger Skoglund showed very interesting movies of his trip to Washington and also the Co'op tour from Duluth to Canada and back to Minneapolis. Treats and ludch were served.

Helen Sorenson, teacher at Ringbo school will have a Christmas tree and program on Friday evening Dec. 21.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Olson Ardith and Robert were guests at the Lundemoe home at Roseau Sunday of last week also at the Ida Dahl home at Pencer.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Swenson and Olivia spent Sunday afternoon at the Pete Sorter home.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Becklund helped Mrs. Oscar Christenson celebrate her birthday.

Mr. and Mrs. Selmer Sorter Sylvia and Julie spent Sunday of last week at Ellef Sorters.

Mr. and Mrs Oscar Swenson and Olivia, Mr. and Mrs. Ole Ose were guests at the Carl Olsons Tuesday evening. Ole Showed slides of varios scenes.

Superior.

Nearly all of us have some decorations on our spelling trees indicating that we are learning our spelling each week.

We have made christmas cards and decorations for our tree.

The sixth graders are learning how to write outlines in English.

The fifth graders are composing stories.

Room 4

Our Christmas party will be on Thursday. Gifts will be exchanged.

Mrs. Ray Brandt and Mrs. Clarence Smith again kindly came over and assisted with the second immunization for diphtheria tetanus or diphtheria-tetanus whooping cough in our school. Dr. Nickerson of Thief River Falls and County nurse Viola Williamson were here. Besides Holt children there were children from Rosebank, Ringbo and Gatzke.

Progress Reported in Peace Talks; Revenue Bureau Scandal Spreading

FIVE POINTS— Peace by Christmas, the dream of millions of Americans in every walk of life, remains just that—a dream. United Nations and Communist negotiators in Korea continue to make proposals, counter-proposals, demands and tentative concessions, but the two sides are seriously split.

Five points are involved: (1) the U.N. demand for no military build-up during an armistice; (2) Joint inspection teams to police the truce; (3) Possession of islands of both coasts of North Korea; (4) A U.N. demand for a ban on construction or repair of air fields; (5) Reduction of Allied military forces through withdrawal from Korea, demanded by the Reds.

MARCH OF DIMES
FIGHT INFANTILE PARALYSIS
JANUARY 2-31

The offer of concessions was first made by the United Nations delegates. They offered to swap Allied possession of strategic islands off both coasts for Communist concessions, as yet not revealed.

The Communists, on the other hand, demanded the right to increase their military potential during the armistice, including the construction of airports. They also demanded the reduction of Allied military forces in Korea by withdrawing them.

Then, in a sudden reversal of policy, the Reds made two proposals: (1) Agreement by both sides not to introduce into Korea any military forces, weapons, and ammunition under any pretext; and (2) both sides to invite representative nations neutral in the Korean War to form a supervisory organ to be responsible for conducting necessary inspections beyond the demilitarized zone, of such ports of entry in the rear as mutually agreed upon by both sides, and to report to the joint armistice commission the result of inspection.

The reversal of policy was so sudden the Allies were caught flat-footed and asked for a short recess. Afterwards, the U.N. command presented 21 questions designed to clarify the two proposals, the most important of which was what nations did the Reds have in mind as neutral inspectors. There are only three or four sections that would be acceptable to the Allies.

If the negotiators can agree upon these two points then they will proceed to the next step of the peace talks. That is exchange of prisoners of war. The Communists report they have almost completed a count of prisoners in their hands and other data necessary for a possible exchange.

The chances for peace in Korea are increasing with each point the negotiators agree upon, but there remains much to be settled. Agreement by Christmas must still be considered a dream.

GAMBLERS—The gamblers in the home towns of the nation are in for a hard time. The Internal Revenue Bureau has announced it will tell all about 2,500 registered gamblers to local police officers. The bureau also announced it would crack down on an estimated 15,000 suspected gamblers who have bothered to register under the new federal gambling-tax law.

Passage of the federal gambling law put most gamblers in a quandary. If local authorities arrest a gambler equipped with stamp, he is subject to prosecution under state laws against gambling. Most states have such laws. If he operates a gambling business and has no stamp, then federal authorities get him.

The bureau now has detailed information about 2,575 bookies and punchboard and numbers operators who applied for the federal stamp by the December 1 deadline.

THE BIG FOUR— While the Allies and Communists were trying to find a basis for peace in Asia, in Europe the big four sat down to discuss disarmament. Although first meetings were cordial, there was little chance of agreement on rival East-West disarmament plans.

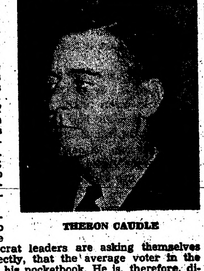
Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Vishinsky continued to charge that while the United States and Britain talk about lowering tension, their policies tend to increase it; the United States tries to hedge around disarmament with technical talk of "levels of armaments"; the western powers have armed forces twice the size of Russia's.

A-WEAPONS— Peace talks in Korea and disarmament in Europe caused little excitement among the people in the home towns of the nation. They were interested, however, in some concrete facts as outlined by Dr. Alvin C. Graves, scientific director of all Atomic Energy Commission tests.

He indicated that the stockpile of A-weapons has increased virtually double during 1951 and expressed his belief that the work the U. S. has done in atomic energy is the reason the world isn't in World War III.

Said Dr. Graves: "I am not in the atomic business because I like to manufacture things that kill people. I am thoroughly convinced that the reason we are not in a third world war now is because of the work the United States has done in atomic energy . . . I'm doing what I am doing because I believe it is the biggest contribution to the cause of world-wide peace."

TAX SCANDAL—The mounting scandal in the Internal Revenue Bureau, touched off when President Truman dismissed Assistant Attorney General Theron Caudle, is having repercussions down to the home town level.



THERON CAUDLE

The scandal could become the most talked about affair in a year that will be marked for its disclosures of corruption.

Caudle denies that he has done anything "illegal", but members of the House Ways and Means subcommittee which is investigating his activities termed some of his practices "questionable". In addition, the administration has taken hard action against two former collectors at Boston and St. Louis who are under indictment; others have been fired or forced to resign; still others are under suspicion pending complete investigation.

Whether or not the administration has acted quick enough to off-set possible reaction in the 1952 election is the question Democrat leaders are asking themselves these days. They reason, and correctly, that the average voter in the home town resents the tax drain on his pocketbook. He is, therefore, directly injured by revelations of tax "fixes". Also, they are inclined to believe there is little chance that the scandal will die before the campaign begins because some tax collectors will be involved in court cases. Anyway, the GOP will keep it alive.

This one scandal could be more damaging to the Democratic campaign in 1952 than all the others of the past year put together. The public doesn't like tampering with its pocketbook.

FOREIGN AID—Charles E. Wilson, president of General Motors, one of America's great corporations, has warned the foreign aid program can not be prolonged to any great length.

He said: "Our country has now a policy that might be called colonialism in reverse. We are exploiting our own people and our own resources to benefit people in other countries. Even with America's great idealism and productivity, this policy cannot safely be counted on for long by any nation."

Wilson spoke at a session of the first International Conference of Manufacturers attended by more than 300 British and Western European industrial leaders.

CHRISTMAS TOYS

Educational Toys Set Sales Records

With 60 per cent more children under five years of age to clutch eagerly at be-ribboned packages this Christmas than there were in the 1939 holiday season, sale records of Christmas toys is almost a certainty. Educational toys is the fastest growing group in the $800 million U.S. toy trade.

Pre-school educational toys, made mostly of hardwoods, are the types formerly found almost entirely in kindergartens; they teach youngsters of from six months to six years of age to recognize colors, develop earlier muscular control and dexterity, and to grasp some of the elements of mechanics, mathematics, spelling and reading. This class of toys is hanging up new sales records year after year. But still champion for all children is sister's doll.

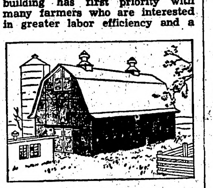
Farm Topics

Building Program Far Behind Schedule

All-Purpose Barn Has Priority on Many Farms

Although American farmers have undertaken considerable construction in recent years, the farm building program is still far behind schedule. Farm authorities report that farm buildings have a high average age, with the average all-purpose barn dating back to 1910.

For this reason the all-purpose building has first priority with many farmers who are interested in greater labor efficiency and a better return on their farm investment.



The building pictured above is 48 feet long, 34 feet wide and 35 high. In addition to being soundly planned—subject to the individual farmer's own requirements — it will make a pleasing addition to most farmsteads.

The floor plan shows six cow stalls on either side of a driveway. Also provided in connection with the dairy sections, and mangers, feed alleys and gutters for each group. The second floor is a haymow. Revisions to suit any farmer's particular needs can be incorporated readily by the builder.

A flexible plan for the all-purpose barn may be obtained free by writing Farm Service Bureau, 111 West Washington St., Chicago 2, and asking for No. AFB-162.

High Production Key To '52 Farm Success

High farm production will be the key to success in 1952, agricultural economists report. They point out that operation costs will be higher, especially for labor, machinery and feed. But they feel the best way to beat higher costs is through greater production and efficiency.

Increased production can be obtained by use of more legumes in the rotation, using more commercial fertilizer or by tilling heavy land which is poorly drained but which can be made highly productive. Modern machinery makes farming larger acreages possible, and only through making maximum use of equipment can it become a profitable buy.

Another method of increasing production will be through expanding the livestock program. Continued high demand for livestock products will keep prices high and open good opportunities for profit.
